Ossein, Osseine (os'e-in), n. 1. Bone tissue. 2. The soft, glue-like substance of bone left after the removal of the earths. Ossein may be separated from the earthy matter by macerating a bone for some time in dilute hydrochloric acid. The calcium salts then gradually dissolve, the mass becomes translucent and soft, and ultimately the cartilage is left free from mineral matter, still retaining, however, the form of the bone. By boiling in water, and on being freed from fat and vascular tissue, it is converted into gelatine. Called also Bone-cartilage.

Osselet (os'se-let), n. [Fr., a little bone, from L. os, ossis, a bone.] 1. A hard substance growing on the inside of a horse's knee among the small bones.—2. The internal bone of some cuttle-fishes.

Osseous (os'se-us), a. [L. osseus, from os, a bone.] Bony; resembling bone.—Osseous breccia, a mass of fragments of the bones of animals cemented together by a calcareous or other matter, and commonly found in fissures and caves.

Ossetic (os-set'ik), a. Applied to an insulated tribe of people of Mount Caucasus, and to the language spoken by them.

Ossianic (os-si-an'ik), a. Pertaining to Ossian, the great Celtic poet, or to his poetry; resembling Ossian's poetry.

Ossicle (os'si-kl), n. [L. ossiculum, dim. from os, a bone.] 1. A small bone; applied in anat. to various small bones of the skeleton. 2. Any hard structure of small size; specifically, applied to the calcareous plates in the integuments of the star-fishes, &c.

Ossiculated (os-sik'ü-lät-ed), a. Furnished with small bones.

Ossiferous (os-sif'er-us), a. [L. os, a bone, and fero, to produce.] Producing or furnishing bones.—Ossiferous breccia. See under OSSEOUS.

Ossific (os-sif'ik), a. [L. os, a bone, and facio, to make.] Having power to ossify or change carnosous and membranous substances to bone.

Ossification (os'si-fä-kä'shon), n. The act of ossifying; the change or process of acting into a bony substance, or the state of being so changed; as, the ossification of an artery.

Ossifrage (os'si-frä-j), n. [L. ossifraga. See OSPREY.] A name formerly given to the osprey or its young. The bird intended in the following extract is uncertain.

These are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls; they shall not be eaten; . . . the eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray. Lev. xi. 13.

Ossifragous (os-sif'ra-gus), a. Breaking or fracturing the bones. [Rare.]

Ossify (os'si-fi), v. t. pret. & pp. ossified; ppr. ossifying. [L. os, bone, and facio, to form.] To form bone; to change from a soft animal substance into bone, or convert into a substance of the hardness of bones.

The dilated aorta everywhere in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified. Sharpe.

Ossify (os'si-fi), v. i. To become bone; to change from soft matter into a substance of bony hardness.

Ossifying (os'si-fi-ing), p. and a. Changing into bone; becoming bone. 'The ossifying process.' Dr. Carpenter.

Ossivorous (os-siv'or-us), a. [L. os, bone, and voro, to eat.] Feeding on bones; eating bones; as, ossivorous quadrupeds. 'A dog and other ossivorous animals.' Derham.

Osspringer, † n. An old name for the osprey. Chapman.

Ossuary (os'sü-a-ri), n. [L. ossuarium, from os, a bone.] A charnel-house; a place where the bones of the dead are deposited.

Notable lamps, with vessels of oils and aromatical liquors, attended noble ossuaries. Sir T. Browne.

Ost (öst). Same as Oast.

Osteal (os'te-al), a. [Gr. osteon, a bone.] Consisting of or pertaining to bone.

Osteine (os'te-in), n. Same as Ossein.

Ostend† (os'tend), v. t. To show; to exhibit; to manifest. 'Mercy to mean offenders we'll ostend.' J. Webster.

Ostensibility (os'ten-si-bil'i-ti), n. The quality or state of being ostensible.

Ostensible (os'ten-si-bl), a. [Fr. ostensible, from L. ostendo, to show—ob, against, towards, and tendo, to stretch, to hold out.] 1. Put forth as having a certain character, whether worthy of it or not; appearing in a certain light; hence, frequently, apparent and not real; having something of sham or pretence; pretended; professed; thus we speak of a person's ostensible reason or pretext for doing something, meaning either that it is not his real reason or that we are not sure whether it is or not; so the ostensible ruler of a country is one who has at least the outward attributes of a ruler.—2. † Capable of being shown; proper or intended to be shown.

From Antwerp he (Rubens) was called to Paris by Mary de Medicis, and painted the ostensible history of her life in the Luxembourg. Walpole.

—Ostensible partner, in law, one whose name is made known, and appears to the world as a partner, and is really such.—Ostensible, Colourable, Specious, Plausible. 'Ostensible is, literally, that which may be (and so is) held out; (1) by way of true account, and (2) by way of fictitious account. The latter is now its more frequent application. That which is ostensible presents such an appearance as affords a presumption of reality. Colourable denotes that which is so artificially treated as to conceal the truth and lull suspicion, giving an appearance of right or justice. Specious is superficially fair, just, or correct, appearing well at first view, but in reality unsound. Plausible is said of those things which please the ear and do not satisfy the judgment; while specious relates to what pleases the eye, yet is not truly what it seems to be. Ostensible causes, pretexts, motives. Colourable views, statements, arguments. Specious argument, talk. Plausible representations, accounts, stories.' Smith's Synonyms.

Ostensibly (os'ten-si-bli), adv. In an ostensible manner; professedly. 'Where he was even employed in the treaty of marriage, though ostensibly acting only in the character of a painter.' Walpole.

What is truly astonishing, the partisans of those two opposite systems were at once prevalent and at once employed, the one ostensibly the other secretly, during the latter part of the reign of Louis XV. Burke.

Ostensio (os'ten-si-ö), n. A tax anciently paid by merchants, &c., for leave to show or expose their goods for sale in markets. Wharton.

Ostension (os'ten-shon), n. Eccles. the exposition of the sacrament of the host.

Ostensive (os'ten-siv), a. [Fr. ostensif, from L. ostendo, to show.] Showing; exhibiting.—Ostensive demonstration, in math. one which plainly and directly demonstrates the truth of a proposition.

Ostensively (os'ten-siv-li), adv. In an ostensive manner; in appearance. 'Ostensively exceeding wise.' Lloyd.

Ostensory (os'ten-so-ri), n. In the R. Cath. Ch. a monstrance or transparent shrine for the exposition of the host. Called also Re-monstrance and Theotoca.

Ostent† (os'tent), n. [L. ostentum, from ostendo, to show.] 1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.

Use well the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent,
To please his grandam. Shak.

2. Show; manifestation; token. 'Such fair ostents of love.' Shak.—3. A prodigy; a portent; anything ominous. 'Latinius frighted with this dire ostent.' Dryden.

Ostentate† (os'ten-tät), v. t. [L. ostento, to show off, to display, intens. of ostendo, to show. See OSTENSIBLE.] To make an ambitious display of; to show or exhibit boastingly. Jer. Taylor.

Ostentation (os'ten-tä'shon), n. [L. ostentatio, from ostento. See OSTENTATE.] 1. Ambitious display; vain show; pretentious parade; display dictated by vanity, or intended to invite praise or flattery. 'A vain ostentation of wit.' Addison.

He knew that good and bountiful minds are sometimes inclined to ostentation. Atterbury.

2. External semblance or appearance. 'Maintain a mourning ostentation.' Shak.—3. † A show or spectacle.

The king would have me present the princes with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antic, or firework. Shak.

SYN. Parade, display, show, flourish, pageantry, pomp, pomposness, vaunting, boasting.

Ostentatious (os'ten-tä'shus), a. 1. Characterized by ostentation; making a display from vanity; fond of showing off one's good qualities, possessions, acts, and the like. 'Far from being ostentatious of the good you do.' Dryden.—2. Showy; gaudy; intended for vain display; as, ostentatious ornaments.—SYN. Pompous, boastful, vaunting, showy, gaudy.

Osteocele (os'tē-ō-sēl), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and kēlē, a rupture.] In pathol. a hernia in which the sac is cartilaginous and bony.

Osteocolla (os'tē-ō-kol'la), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and kolla, glue.] 1. A deposited carbonate of lime, forming an incrustation on the roots and stems of plants, found in some parts of Germany in loose sandy grounds. It takes its name from an erroneous opinion that it has the quality of uniting fractured bones.—2. An inferior kind of glue obtained from bones; bone-glue.

Osteoscope (os'tē-ō-kōp), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and kopos, labour, uneasiness.] Pain in the bones; a violent fixed pain in any part of a bone; bone-ache. Dunglison.

Osteodentine (os'tē-ō-den'tin), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and dens, dentis, a tooth.] That modification of dentin observed in the teeth of the cachalot and some others of the Cetacea, as also in those of many existing and extinct fishes, in which the tissue is traversed by irregularly ramified vascular or medullary canals.

Osteogenesis, Osteogeny (os'tē-ō-jen'e-sis, os-tē-ō-jē-ni), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and genesis, generation, origin.] The formation or growth of bone.

Whatever may be the precise mode of the formation of the lacunae and canaliculi, it may be considered as a well-established fact, that the production of concentric layers of osseous substance within the Haversian canals takes place in a manner that more closely corresponds with the intra-membranous, than with the intra-cartilaginous form of osteogenesis. Dr. Carpenter.

Osteographer (os-tē-ō-gra-fēr), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and graphō, to describe.] An anatomist who describes the bony part of the body, or the skeleton.

Osteography (os-tē-ō-gra-fi), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and graphō, to describe.] A description of the bones; osteology. Craik.

Osteolepis (os-tē-ō-lē-pis), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and lepis, a scale.] A genus of ganoid fishes from the old red sandstone, with an exoskeleton of enamelled bone, and an endoskeleton of cartilage. It differed from its allies in having two anal and two dorsal fins alternating with each other.

Osteolite (os'tē-ō-lit), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and lithos, a stone.] An earthy kind of phosphate of lime, probably resulting from the alteration of apatite, occurring near Hanau, and in Amberg in the Erzgebirge.

Osteologer (os-tē-ō-lō-jēr), n. An osteologist. Osteologic, Osteological (os'tē-ō-lōj'ik, os-tē-ō-lōj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to osteology or a description of the bones.

Osteologically (os'tē-ō-lōj'ik-al-li), adv. According to osteology.

Osteologist (os-tē-ō-lō-jist), n. One versed in osteology; one who describes the bones of animals.

Osteology (os-tē-ō-lō-jī), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and logos, discourse.] That branch of anatomy which treats of the physical and chemical properties of the osseous tissue, and of the form, development, articulations, &c., of the various bones of which the skeleton is composed.

Osteoma (os-tē-ō-ma), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone.] In pathol. a bony tumour.

Osteomalakia (os'tē-ō-ma-lā'ki-a), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and malakos, soft.] In pathol. a diseased softening of the bones in adults.

Osteomancy (os'tē-ō-man-ti), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and mantia, prophecy.] Divination by means of bones. Selden.

Osteoplasty (os'tē-ō-plas-ti), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and plassō, to form.] An operation by which the total or partial loss of a bone is remedied. Dunglison.

Osteopterygium (os-tē-ōp'tēr-ij'us), a. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and pterygion, a fin.] Same as Acanthopterygious.

Osteo-sarcoma, Osteo-sarcosis (os'tē-ō-sar-kō'ma, os'tē-ō-sar-kō'sis), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and sarkōma, sarkōsis, from sarz, flesh.] Disease of the bony tissue which consists in softening of its laminae, and their transformation into a fleshy substance analogous to that of cancer. Dunglison.

Osteotome (os'tē-ō-tōm), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and tomē, a cutting.] In surg. a saw-like instrument for cutting bones; specifically, one for cutting the bones of the fetal cranium when it is necessary to reduce it considerably to facilitate delivery. E. H. Knight.

Osteotomy (os'tē-ō-tō-mi), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and tomē, a cutting.] The dissection of bones.

Osteozoa (os'tē-ō-zō'a), n. pl. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and zōon, an animal.] In zool. a term sometimes used as an equivalent to Vertebrata.

Osteozoar (os'tē-ō-zō-ā'ri-a), n. pl. Same as Osteozoa.

Ostuary (os'ti-a-ri), n. [L.L. ostiarium, ostiarus, from L. ostium, door, entrance, river mouth.] 1.† The mouth of a river.

The Nilus hath seven ostiaries, that is, by seven channels disburtheth itself into the sea. Sir T. Browne.

2. A doorkeeper.

The office of the ostuary was to open and shut the church doors, to look to the decent keeping of the church, and the holy ornaments laid up in the vestry. Weener.

Ostiolum (os-ti'ō-lum), n. [L., dim. of ostium, a door.] In bot. the orifice of the perithecium of some fungi, as Sphæria.

Ostitis (os'ti'tis), n. [Gr. osteon, a bone, and term. -itis, signifying inflammation.] Inflammation of a bone.

Ostler (os'lēr), See HOSTLER.

Ostleress (os'lēr-es), n. A female ostler. Fuller. 'A plump arm'd ostleress and a stable wench.' Tennyson. [Rare.]

Ostliery† (os'lēr-i), See HOSTLERY.

Ostmen (os'tmēn), n. [G. and Sw. ost, osten, Dan. ost, osten, the east. See EAST.] East man: the name formerly given to Danish settlers in Ireland. Ld. Lyttelton.

Ostracea (os-trā'shē-a), n. [New L. ostracea, from L. ostræa, ostræum, Gr. ostræon, an oyster.] The family of bivalves, of which the genus Ostrea (the oyster) is the type, and which is characterized by the mouth being widely open, without special orifices. See OYSTER.

Ostracean (os-trā'shē-an), n. A bivalve mollusc of the family Ostracea.

Ostracion (os-trā'shi-on), n. [Gr. ostrakon, a shell.] A genus of teleostean fishes of the sub-order Plectognathi, in which the body is entirely enclosed, with the exception of the tail, in an immovable case composed of large ganoid plates firmly united to one another at their edges; trunk-fishes. There is little muscular substance, but the liver yields much oil. The species are mostly found in the Indian and American seas; none are British.

Ostracion trigloporus (Trunk-fish).

Ostracism (os'tra-sizm), n. [Gr. ostrakismos, from ostrakon, a shell, a voting tablet.] 1. A political measure practised among the ancient Athenians by which persons considered dangerous to the state were banished by public vote for a term of years, with leave to return to the enjoyment of their estates at the end of the period. It takes this name from the shell or tablet by which each person recorded his vote. Hence—2. Banishment in general; expulsion; separation.

Virtue in courtiers' hearts
Suffers an ostracism and departs. Donne.

Ostracite (os'tra-sit), n. [Gr. ostrakitis, from ostrakon, a shell.] A term occasionally applied to any fossil oyster or oyster-like shell whose species is undetermined. Page.

Ostracize, Ostracise (os'tra-siz), v.t. pret. & pp. ostracized; ppr. ostracizing. 1. To exile by ostracism; to banish by popular vote, as personages dreaded for influence or power were banished by the ancient Athenians. Hence—2. To banish from society; to put under the ban; to exclude from public or private favour.

The democratic stars did rise
And all that worth from hence did ostracise. Marvell.

Ostracoda (os-tra-kō'da), n. pl. [Gr. ostrakon, a shell.] An order of entomostracous crustaceans, in which the body is entirely enclosed under a large shield, having the form of a bivalve shell. The gills are attached to the posterior jaws, and there are only two pairs of feet, which serve for locomotion but not for swimming, that function being served by the antennae. Some of the members have a distinct heart, as those of the genus Cypridina, but it is wanting in most. The principal genus of this order is Cypris, the species of which are inhabitants of pools and streams. The genus Cypridina is found in the sea.

Ostracostei (os-tra-kos'tē-i), n. pl. [Gr. ostrakon, a shell.] A family of extinct placogonoid fishes having the head and generally the anterior part of the trunk encased in a strong armour composed of numerous large ganoid plates immovably joined to one another. The posterior part of the body was more or less completely unprotected. It includes the genera Pterichthys, Pteraspis, Cephalaspis, Coccosteus, &c., all of which seem to have been extinct since the close of the Devonian period. H. A. Nicholson.

Ostrea (os'trē-a), n. [L. ostrea, an oyster.]

A genus of marine lamellibranchiate molluscs; the oysters. The common edible oyster is the O. edulis. See OYSTER.

Ostreaceous (os-trē-ō'sh-us), a. Of or belonging to the Ostracea, or oyster family.

Ostreaculture (os'trē-a-kul'tūr), n. [L. ostrea, an oyster, and cultura, culture.] The artificial cultivation or breeding of oysters.

Ostreidæ (os-trē-i-dē), n. pl. [Gr. ostræon, an oyster, and eidos, resemblance.] A family of lamellibranchiate molluscs, of which Ostrea (the oyster) is the type genus.

Ostreophagist (os-trē-ō-fa-jist), n. [Gr. ostræon, an oyster, and phagō, to eat.] One who feeds upon oysters; an oyster-eater.

Ostrich (os'trich), n. [O.Fr. ostruche, ostruce, Mod. Fr. autruche, Sp. avestruz, from L. avis, a bird, and struthio, Gr. struthion, an ostrich.] A large cursorial bird of the genus Struthio, family Struthionidæ. The true or African ostrich (S. camelus) inhabits the sandy plains of Africa and Arabia, and is the largest of all existing birds, attaining a height of from 6 to 8 feet. The head and neck are nearly naked, and the quill-feathers of the wings and tail have their barbs wholly disconnected. It is for these white plumes that the bird is chiefly hunted and reared in domestication, as they are highly esteemed as articles of dress and decoration. The legs are extremely strong, the thighs are naked, and the tarsi are covered with scales. There are only two toes, the hallux or hind toe being wanting. The pubic bones are united, a conformation occurring in no other bird. The wings are of small size and are incapable of being used as organs of flight, but the birds can run with extraordinary speed, outdistancing the fleetest horse. The food consists of grass, grain, and substances of a vegetable nature, and to aid in the trituration of this food the ostrich swallows large stones, bits of iron and glass, or other hard materials that come in the way. Ostriches are polygamous, each male consorting with several females, and they generally keep together in larger or smaller flocks. The eggs are of great size, averaging 3 lbs. each in weight, and several hens often lay in the same nest, which is merely a hole scraped in the sand. The eggs appear to be hatched mainly by the exertions of both parents relieving each other in the task of incubation, but also partly by the heat of the sun. The South African ostrich is often considered as a distinct species under the name of S. australis. Three South American birds of the same family (Struthionidae), but of the genus Rhea, are popularly known as the American ostrich, and are very closely allied to the true ostrich, differing chiefly in having three-toed feet and each toe armed with a claw. The best known of the three is R. americana, the nandu, or nanduguacu of the Brazilians, inhabiting the great American pampas south of the equator. It is considerably smaller than the true ostrich, and its plumage is much inferior. R. Darwinii, a native of Patagonia, is still smaller. The third species is the R. macrorhyncha, so called from its long bill.

Ostrich-board (os'trich-bôrd), n. In mediæval arch. wainscot.

Ostridge (os'trij), n. The ostrich. Shak.

Ostriferous (os-trif'er-us), a. Producing or containing oysters.

Ostrogoth (os'trô-goth), n. [L.L. ostrogothas, from ostrus, eastern (Goth, east), and Gothus, a Goth.] One of the eastern Goths, as distinguished from the Visigoths or western Goths. See GOTH.

Ostrogothic (os-trô-goth'ik), a. Of or relating to the Ostrogoths.

Ostrya (os'tri-a), n. [Gr. ostrya, a tree with hard wood.] A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Corylaceæ; hop-hornbeam. It derives its English name from its inflorescence, consisting, in the female, of scales packed closely over each other, so as to resemble very much the catkin of a hop, and from its foliage being similar to that of the hornbeam. Two species are known, the O. vulgaris, a native of the south of Europe, and O. virginiana, of the United States. Both form handsome deciduous trees.

Oswego-starch (os-wê-gô-stârch), n. A very fine kind of starch made from Indian corn or maize, in the town of Oswego, in the state of New York. Simmonds.

Oswego-tea (os-wê-gô-tê), n. [From Oswego, a town in the state of New York.] A North American plant, the Monarda didyma, the leaves of which emit a very grateful and refreshing odour, resembling that of mint or sage. They are said to possess tonic, stomachic, and deobstruent virtues.

Otacoustic (ô-ta-kous'tik), a. [Gr. ous, ôtos, an ear, and akoustikos, belonging to the sense of hearing, from akouô, to hear.] Assisting the sense of hearing; as, an otacoustic instrument.

Otacoustic, Otacousticon (ô-ta-kous'tik, ô-ta-kous'tik-on), n. An instrument to facilitate hearing; an ear-trumpet.

Otaheite-salap (ô-ta-hi-tê-sal'ep), n. Another name for Tacca starch or Tahiti arrowroot: from Tahiti or Otaheite, the principal of the Society Islands.

Otalgia (ô-tâl'ji-a), n. [Gr. ous, ôtos, the ear, and algos, pain.] A pain in the ear; ear-ache.

Otalgic (ô-tâl'jik), n. A remedy for the ear-ache.

Otalgy (ô'tâl-ji), n. Same as Otalgia.

Otaria (ô-tâ-ri-a), n. [Gr. ôtaros, large-eared, from ous, ôtos, an ear.] A genus of seals, characterized by having projecting external ears, and by the double cutting edge of the four middle upper incisors. The members of this genus are found both in the seas of the northern and of the southern hemisphere, and are divided into hair-seals and fur-seals, the latter furnishing the sealskin of commerce. One of the genus is the O. jubata, or sea-lion. See SEA-LION, and SEA.

Otary (ô'ta-ri), n. A seal of the genus Otaria.

Otheoscope (ô-thê-ô-skôp), n. [Gr. othêô, to push, and skopeô, to see.] An instrument akin to the radiometer.

Other (uth'er), a. and pron. [A Sax. ôther, O. Sax. uthar, and/or, O. Fris. other, and/or, D. and G. ander, Icel. annar, Dan. anden, Goth. anþar; cogn. Lith. antras, L. alter, Skr. anyatara, compar. of anya—other. All these are comparative forms, the Skr. anya- tara in particular being clearly seen to be so. In A. Sax. the n is omitted as in other cases before th. See N.] 1. Not the same; different from that which has been specified; not identical; second of two; additional; remaining.

Otter (ot'ér), n. [A. Sax. otter, otor, oter, D. and G. otter, Dan. odder, Icel. otr; cog. Lith. adra, Rus. and Pol. wydra.] 1. A digitigrade carnivorous mammal, of the genus Lutra, of which there are several species. They all have large flatish heads, short ears, webbed toes, crooked nails, and tails slightly flattened horizontally. The common river otter, the Lutra vulgaris of Europe, is a quadruped adapted to amphibious habits by its short, strong, flexible, palmated feet, which serve as oars to propel it through the water, and by its long and strong tail, which acts as a powerful rudder, and enables the animal to change its course with great ease and rapidity. It inhabits the banks of rivers, and feeds principally on fish. When its retreat is found the otter instantly takes the water and dives, remaining a long time underneath it, and rising at a considerable distance from the place at which it dived. The weight of a full-grown male is from 20 to 24 lbs., and its length is about 2 feet exclusive of the tail. In many parts of England, and especially in Wales, the otter is hunted with dogs trained for this purpose. The other species of otters which are found in different parts of the world do not greatly differ from the common otter. The sea-otter is of larger size, and forms the type of a distinct sub-genus, Enhydra, which connects the otter with the seal. The fur of the otter is much prized, being very dense and fine, especially that of the American otter. The fur of the seaotter is also prized. The flesh of the otter is rank and fishy.—2. A destructive instrument whose use in fishing is now illegal, so called from its deadly character. It consists of a float from which several lines hang. It is either trailed or moored.

Oubliette (ô-bli-ét), n. [Fr., from oublier, L. obliviscor, to forget.] A dungeon with an opening only at the top for the admission of air, used for persons condemned to perpetual imprisonment or to perish secretly, and existing in some old castles or other buildings. The oubliettes shown in the adjoining cut consist, it will be seen, of two dungeons, an upper (E) and a lower (G), the latter descending far below the bottom of the moat B. The descent from the ground-floor of the château into the vaulted chamber C is by a spiral staircase.

The opening into the dungeon E is in the centre of the floor of C, and exactly corresponds with the opening into the well-like dungeon below. From the trap A a prisoner could be let down into the well without previously placing him in the dungeon E. D is a small aperture in the outer wall admitting light to the chamber C.

The place was utterly dark, the oubliette, I suppose, of the accursed convent.

Ouch (ouch), n. [From O. E. nouch, the n being dropped from being confounded with that of the indefinite article; comp. eyas for negyas, nias.] 1. A bezel or socket in which a precious stone or seal is set. Ex. xxviii. 11.—2. A tannour or boil on the skin; a carbuncle.

Ours (ourz), pron. See OUR.

Ourself (our'self), pron. Myself; generally added after we and us, though sometimes without either; used chiefly in the regal or formal style. 'Unless we would denote ourself of all force to defend us.' Clarendon.

What touches us ourself shall be last served. Shak.

Ourselves (our'selvz), pl. of ourself. We or us, not others; often when used as a nominative added to we by way of emphasis or opposition; when in the objective often without emphasis and simply serving as the reflexive pronoun corresponding to us; as, we blame ourselves greatly. 'Safe in ourselves, while on ourselves we stand.' Dryden.

We ourselves might distinctly number in words a great deal farther than we usually do. Locke.

Ousel, Ouzel (ô'zl), n. [A. Sax. ôste, an ouzel, probably the same word as O.H.G. amisa, G. amsel, an ouzel, the m being lost and the vowel lengthened before s; comp. goose, houzel (from hunsel).] An old or poetical name for the blackbird. 'The ouzel cock so black of hue, with orange-tawny bill.' Shak.

Oviduct (ô-vi-dukt'), n. [L. ovum, an egg, and ductus, a duct.] A passage for the ovum or egg from the ovary of animals.

Oviferous (ô-vi-fêr-us'), a. [L. ovum, an egg, and fero, to bear.] A term applied to certain receptacles in some animals in which the eggs are received after having been excluded from the ordinary formative organs of the ovum, as in parasitic crustaceans.

Oviform (ô-vi-form'), n. [L. ovum, an egg, and forma, form.] Having the form or figure of an egg; as, an oviform leaf.

Ovigerous (ô-vi-jêr-us'), a. [L. ovum, an egg, and gero, to bear.] Bearing ova or ovules; oviferous.

Ovina (ô-vi-na'), n. pl. [L. ovis, a sheep.] A division of animals comprising the sheep and goats; the Capridæ.

Ovine (ô-vin'), a. [L. ovinus, from ovis, a sheep.] Pertaining to sheep; consisting of sheep.

Ovipara (ô-vi-pa-ra'), n. pl. [L. pl. neut. of oviparus, egg-producing—ovum, an egg, and pario, to produce.] That division of animals which bring forth eggs, as birds, reptiles, fishes, &c.: opposed to Vivipara, or animals which produce their young alive.

Oviparous (ô-vi-pa-rus'), a. [L. ovum, an egg, and pario, to produce.] Producing eggs, or producing young from eggs. An animal is said to be oviparous when the ovum or egg is excluded from the body entire, and hatched after such exclusion.

Birds, reptiles, and fishes are oviparous animals.

Oviposit (ô-vi-poz'it'), v.t. To deposit eggs; specifically said of insects furnished with an ovipositor.

Oviposition (ô-vi-pô-zit'shon'), n. [L. ovum, an egg, and positio, a depositing.] The laying or depositing of eggs, especially by insects.

Ovipositor (ô-vi-poz'it-êr'), n. An organ with which many insects, especially of the orders Hymenoptera, Orthoptera, Coleoptera, and Diptera, are furnished, for depositing their eggs in a position suitable for their development, this being sometimes in bark or leaves, or even in the bodies of other animals. It forms the termination of the abdomen, of the last rings of which it is a modification, and in some of these orders it is as long as, or even longer than the body. The sting of bees is a modified ovipositor.

Ovis (ô-vis'), n. [L.] The name by which Linnaeus and Cuvier distinguish the sheep as a genus from the goats and antelopes.

Ovisac (ô-vi-sak'), n. [L. ovum, an egg, and saccus, a sack.] The cavity in the ovary which immediately contains the ovum.

Ovoid, Ovoidal (ô'void, ô'void-al'), a. [L. ovum, an egg, and Gr. eidos, form.] Having a shape resembling that of an egg.

Ovulo (ô'vulo-lô'), n. [It., from L. ovum, an egg.] In arch. a round moulding, the quarter of a circle; called also the Quarter Round. In Greek archit. however, there is a deviation from the exact quadrantal form, which is most apparent at the upper portion where it resembles the form of an egg (ovum), whence the moulding derives its name.

Oology (ô-vôlô-jî'), n. Same as Oology.

Ooviviparous (ô'vô-vi-vip'a-rus'), a. [L. ovum, an egg, vivo, to live, and pario, to produce.] A term applied to an animal in which the eggs are hatched within the body, not being discharged from the female after leaving the ovary, but being retained till the young issue from them, as is the case in some fishes and reptiles (as sharks and vipers).

Ovulatory (ô'vû-la-ri'), a. Pertaining to ovules.

Ovulation (ô'vû-lâ-shon'), n. In physiol. the act or process of an egg or ovulum leaving the ovary; the formation and discharge of ova from the ovary, which in the human female takes place at menstruation.

Ovule (ô'vûl'), n. [L. ovum, an egg.] Lit. a little egg; a small vesicle; specifically, in bot. a young or rudimentary seed; a small pellicid pulpy body borne by the placenta of a plant, and gradually changing into a seed. (See OVARY.) It is inclosed or naked. It is composed of two sacs, one within another, which are called primine and secundine, and of a nucleus within the sacs.

In both (plants and animals) the cycle of life is begun by a small round dot of living matter, which we call in the plant an ovule, in the animal an ovum.

Overw. Reg.

Ovuliferous (ô'vû-lif-êr-us'), a. Producing ovules.

Ovulite (ô'vû-lit'), n. A fossil egg.

Ovulum (ô'vû-lum'), n. pl. Ovula (ô'vû-lâ'), [L. dim. of ovum, an egg.] Lit. a little egg; a small vesicle, such as are found in the ovary of mammiferous animals; an ovule.

Ovum (ô'vum'), n. pl. Ova (ô'vâ'), [L., an egg.] 1. A small vesicle within the ovary of a female animal, when impregnated becoming the embryo or rudiments of the fetus.—2. In arch. a term applied to ornaments in the shape of an egg, into which the echinus or ovolo is often carved.

Owche, n. Same as Ouch.

Owe (ô), v.t. pret. & pp. owed; ppr. owing. [O.E. owe, ave, owen, awen, from A. Sax. agan, to own, to possess, to have (with common change of g to w). Sc. aich or aigh, to own (from the Scandinavian). Icel. eiga, Sw. äga, ega, O.H.G. eigan, Goth. aigan, to have or possess. The pret. in A. Sax. was ahte, whence ought (which see); the pp. was agen, whence (one's) own, which again has produced the verb to own. To owe a person money is to have it for him, to have to pay it to him.] 1.† To possess; to have; to be the owner of. The following example happily illustrates the word in this sense as well as in its ordinary sense of indebtedness.

Be pleased then To pay that duty, which you truly owe To him that owes it; namely, this young prince. Shak.

2. To be indebted; to be obliged or bound to pay.

One was brought unto him which owed him ten thousand talents. Mat. xviii. 24.

Owe no man any thing, but to love one another. Rom. xiii. 8.

3. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.

That he may know how frail His fallen condition is, and to me owe All his deliverance, and to none but me. Milton.

o, Ovipositor of Field-cricket.

with which many insects, especially of the orders Hymenoptera, Orthoptera, Coleoptera, and Diptera, are furnished, for depos-

4. To be due or owing; used in passive forms. 'To give obedience where 'tis truly owed,' Shak. 'Which is not owed to you,' Shak.

O deem thy fall not owed to man's decree. Pope.

Owe, v. i. To be bound or obliged; ought. Chaucer. See OUGHT.

Owely† (ô'wel-ti), n. [Barbarously formed from owe.] Equality. In law, a kind of equality of service in subordinate tenures. Wharton.

Owenite (ô'en-it), n. A follower of Robert Owen, who attempted to reorganize society on socialist or co-operative and anti-religious principles.

Ower (our), prep. Over; beyond; above. [Scotch.]

Ower (our), adv. Over; too; too much; excessively. [Scotch.]

Owerby (our'bi), adv. Over the way; a little way across. [Scotch.]

Ower-come (our'kum), n. Same as O'er-come.

Owerlay (our'lā), n. Same as O'erlay.

Owerloup (our-loup), v. t. To overleap; to jump over, as a fence or other obstruction; to trespass on another's property. [Scotch.]

Owerloup (our'loup), n. [Scotch.] 1. The act of leaping over a fence or other obstruction.—2. An occasional trespass of cattle.—3. The stream-tide at the change of the moon.

Owerword (our'wôrd), n. An oft-repeated word or phrase; the burden of a song; the refrain. Burns. [Scotch.]

Where, adv. [A. Sax. dhwoer.] Anywhere. Chaucer.

Owing (ô'ing), ppr. [This is used in the passive sense of owed, being due; comp. the house is building.] 1. Required by obligation to be paid; due; as, the money owing to a labourer for services, or to another country for goods.—2. Ascribable, as to a cause; resulting; due; as, misfortunes are often owing to vices or miscalculations.—3. Imputable, as to an agent; as, his recovery from sickness is owing less to his physician than to the strength of his constitution.

Owl (oul), n. [O. E. uile, ule, A. Sax. ûle; L. G. ûle, D. uile, Icel. ugla, Dan. ugle, Sw. uggla, O. H. G. ûla, G. eule. These names were no doubt derived from a root imitative of its cry; as also O. H. G. hâwo, and L. uhula, an owl. Comp. L. uhulo, Gr. ololuzô, to lament, to howl, E. howl.] 1. One of a group of birds forming the family Strigidae, which in itself represents the nocturnal section of the order Raptores or birds of prey. These birds are found in every country, but their headquarters may be said to as horns or ears. The owl has from early times been generally considered a bird of evil omen, and has been an object of dislike and dread to the superstitious, though with the ancient Athenians the appearance of the bird was deemed favourable. It was sacred to Minerva, and its image was stamped on Athenian coins.—2. A fancy variety of the domestic pigeon.

Owl (oul), v. t. 1.† To carry wool or sheep out of the country, at one time an offence at law.—2. To carry on a contraband or unlawful trade; to skulk about with contraband goods.

Owler (oul'ér), n. One who was guilty of the offence of owling.

Owlery (oul'ér-i), n. 1. An abode or haunt of owls.—2. A quality of an owl, or like that of an owl. Carlyle.

Owlet (oul'et), n. [Dim. of owl.] An owl; an howlet; sometimes, a young owl.

Owl-eyed (oul'id), a. Having eyes like an owl's.

Owling (oul'ing), n. The obsolete offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the country, formerly punished by fine or banishment.

Owl-ish (oul'ish), a. Resembling an owl; owl-like.

Owl-light (oul'lit), n. Glimmering or imperfect light. 'The benighted days of monkish owl-light.' Warburton.

Owl-like (oul'lik), a. Like an owl in look and habits. 'Now like an owl-like watchman he must walk.' Donne.

Own (ôn), a. [A. Sax. âgen, the part of agan, to possess. (See OWE.) So also L. G. âgen, Dan. and Sw. âgen, Icel. âginn, D. and G. eigen, own.] Belonging to; possessed; peculiar; proper to; domestic; not foreign; usually expressing ownership or exclusive ownership with emphasis. It always follows a possessive pronoun, or a noun in the possessive, as my own, his own, their own, John's own. 'Knit thee gloves made of her own spun yarn.' Gay.

There's nothing sillier than a crafty knave outwitted, and beaten at his own play.

Sir R. L'Estrange.

A woman's face with Nature's own hand painted
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion.

Shak.

Sometimes used not so much denoting property as imparting a peculiar tenderness to an expression. 'Thine own true knight.' Shak.

'My own child,' he said, as soon as his tears would let him speak; 'my own, own child.' Trollope.

In this sense it has occasionally the superlative form.

My bride to be, my evermore delight,
My own heart's heart and ownest own farewell.

Tennyson.

Sometimes fixed, settled, or arranged by a person for himself, as, name your own day; take it at your own price.—To hold one's own, to be able to maintain one's own cause; to come off at least equal to an adversary; not to lose ground.

Own (ôn), v. t. [From the adjective; A. Sax. âgnian, Icel. âigna, Dan. âgne, G. eignen, to own.] 1. To have the legal or rightful title to; to have the right of property in; to hold or possess by right.—2. To acknowledge to belong to; to avow or admit the possession of.

When you come find me out,
And own me for your son.

Dryden.

3. To concede; to allow; to admit to be true; not to deny; to acknowledge; to confess; as, to own the truth of a statement; to own a fault. 'Others will own their weakness of understanding.' Locke.

Many own the gospel of salvation more from custom than conviction.

F. M. Mason.

4. To recognize; to admit with a formal acknowledgment.

I rode to church, and met my lord chamberlain upon the walls of the garrison, who owned and spoke to me.

Pepps.

The wakeful bloodhound rose and shook his hide;

But his sagacious eye an inmate owns.

Keats.

Own (ôn), v. i. To confess; with to. 'May did not own to the possession of the bond.'

Mrs. Crowe.

Owner (ôn'ér), n. One who owns; the rightful proprietor; one who has the legal or rightful title, whether he is the possessor or not.

The ox knoweth his owner.

Isa. i. 3.

A freehold though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession and stout in the defence of it.

Addison.

Ownership (ôn'ér-ship), n. The state of being an owner; the right by which a thing belongs to some person or body to the exclusion of all others; proprietorship.

Owre† (our), n. An auerochs.

Owse (ouz), n. Same as Ooze.

Owsell† (ou'z'l), n. [From owse, ooze.] A slough; a quagmire.

I am verily persuaded that neither the touch of conscience, nor the sense and seeing of any religion, ever drew these into that damnable and untwinable train and ousell of perdition.

J. Milton.

Owsen (ous'en), n. Oxen. Burns. [Scotch.]

Owser (ouz'ér), n. Tanner's ooze.

Ox (oks), n. pl. Oxen (ok'sn). [A. Sax. oza, pl. oacan, Fris. oza, Icel. ozi, uaz, Sw. and Dan. oze, D. os, G. ochs, ochse, O. H. G. ohso, Goth. auhsa, auhsus, an ox. More remote connections are L. vacca, a cow, Skr. ukshâ, an ox. Root meaning doubtful. Oxen is now almost the only representative of the numerous A. Sax. plurals in -an; comp. also shoon, hosen, eyne, kine.] The general name for the different species of animals of the genus Bos (which see). The common ox is one of the most valuable of our domestic animals. Its flesh is the principal article of animal food; and there is scarcely any part of the animal that is not useful to mankind; the skin, the horns, the bones, the blood, the hair, and the very refuse of all these, have their separate uses. Having been specially domesticated by man from a stock which it is probably impossible to trace, the result has been the formation of very many breeds, races, or permanent varieties, some of which are valued for their flesh and hides, some for the richness and abundance of their milk, while others are in great repute both for beef and milk. Among the first class may be mentioned the Durham or Short-horn, the Polled Aberdeen or Angus, and the West Highland or Kyloe. Among the most celebrated for dairy purposes are the Alderney, the Ayrshire, and the Suffolk Dun. For the purposes both of the dairy-farmer and the grazer the Hereford and a cross between a Short-horn and an Ayrshire are much fancied. The ox is used in many parts of the world, and in a very few districts of Britain, as a beast of draught. The North Devon breed is well adapted for draught, and in Devonshire much agricultural labour is still performed by teams of oxen of this breed. The 'wild ox,' now existing only in a few parks, as at Hamilton, seems, whatever its origin, to have been formerly an inhabitant of many forest districts in Britain, particularly in the north of England and the south of Scotland. The name is used in a more restricted sense to signify the male of the bovine genus (Bos Taurus) castrated, and full-grown, or nearly so. The young castrated male is called a steer. He is called an ox-calf or bull-calf until he is a year old, and a steer until he is four years old. The same animal not castrated is called a bull. Besides the European ox there are several other varieties, as the Indian or zebu, with a hump on its back, the Abyssinian, Madagascar, and South African.—To have the black ox tread on one's foot, to know what sorrow or adversity is.

Ray.

Ox-acid (oks-as'id), n. An acid containing oxygen; an oxyacid.

Oxalamide (oks-al'a-mid), n. Same as Oxamide.

Oxalate (oks-al'ât), n. In chem. a salt formed by a combination of oxalic acid with a base; as, the oxalate of ammonia.

Oxalic (oks-al'ik), a. [Gr. oxalis, sorrel, from oxys, sharp, acid.] Pertaining to sorrel.—Oxalic acid (C₂H₂O₄), the acid of sorrel, first discovered in the juice of the Oxalis Acetosella.

Barn-owl (Strix flammea)

be in northerly and cold climates. They feed, for the most part, upon small mammals, little birds, and insects. The head is large, and the ears are furnished with external conchs, which exist in no other birds; the eyes are very large, directed to the front, and surrounded by two conical disks of feathers. The irides expand to a great size during the night, which enables the owl to see better during the night than diurnal birds. During the day the irides are contracted to a very small size. The voice of the owl is harsh and screeching. One of the most common species is the barn-owl (Strix flammea), which frequents barns, towers, churches, old ruins, &c. Though the greater part of the owl tribe are adapted to the pursuit of their prey either by night or in the twilight, there are some members of it in which this character is much less developed, and in which the habits are rather diurnal than nocturnal; some of these are known by the names hawk-owl and eagle-owl, indicating their resemblance to the diurnal birds of prey. Some owls are furnished with tufts of feathers rising above the eyes, and known

It also exists in the roots of rhubarb, bistort, gentian, &c., combined with potash; in several kinds of lichens it is found in union with lime. It forms the juice sold under the erroneous name of salt of lemons. It is a violent poison.

Oxalidaceæ, Oxalideæ (oks'al-i-dă'sê-ê, oks'al-id'ê-ê), n. pl. A nat. order of polypetalous exogenous plants, with a superior ovary, a small number of hypogynous stamens, and distinct styles; now sometimes combined with Geraniaceæ. The species are natives of all the hotter and temperate parts of the world, and most abundant in America and the Cape of Good Hope. The genus Oxalis, which is the type, is called wood-sorrel, from the acidity of the leaves, and the natural habitation of the European species in a wild state. The genus is, however, most abundant at the Cape of Good Hope, where the species are extremely ornamental. In the East Indies the genus Averrhoa produces a fruit (the carambola or blimbing) used for pickling and preserving. The British Oxalis Acetosella, or common wood-sorrel, has been supposed to be the true shamrock of the Irish. In the tropical parts of India is the Oxalis sensitiva, so named in consequence of its pinnate leaves being irritable like the sensitive plant. The European trefoil-leaved species have been ascertained to have the same property, only in a more feeble degree.

Oxalis (oks'a-lis), n. A genus of plants of the nat. order Oxalidaceæ. There are two British species, O. Acetosella, or common wood-sorrel, and O. corniculata, or yellow procumbent wood-sorrel. See OXALIDACEÆ. Oxalite (oks'a-lit), n. A native oxalate of iron protoxide, found in the brown-coal of Germany; humboldtine.

Oxaluria (oks-a-lû'ri-a), n. In pathol. a morbid condition of the system, in which a prominent symptom is the presence of crystallized oxalate of lime in the urine. Called also Oxalic Acid Diathesis.

Oxaluric (oks-a-lû'rik), a. Applied to an acid ($C_2H_2N_2O_4$) produced by the decomposition of parabanic acid. It is a white or slightly yellow crystalline powder of an acid taste. It forms salts with the alkalies and alkaline earths.

Oxalyl (oks'a-lij), n. In chem. the hypothetical radical of oxalic acid. Called also Carbonic Oxide.

Oxamate (oks'a-mât), n. In chem. a salt of oxamic acid.

Oxamic (oks-am'ik), a. Applied to a monobasic acid produced by the dehydration of oxalate of ammonium.—Oxamic acid ($C_2H_3NO_3$) is a white crystalline powder, sparingly soluble in cold water, still less soluble in alcohol, and insoluble in ether.

Oxamide (oks'a-mid), n. ($C_2H_4N_2O_2$) A white substance produced during the destructive distillation of oxalate of ammonia; hence its name, compounded of oxalis and ammonia. Called also Oxalamide.

Ox-bird (oks'bêrd), n. The sanderling (Arenaria vulgaris), a small wading bird which frequents many of our shores.

Oxbiter (oks'bi-têr), n. Molothrus peccoris, an American bird of the bunting group.

Ox-bow (oks'bô), n. 1. A curved piece of wood encircling an ox's neck when yoked. 2. Naut. the bend or reach of a river. Admiral Smyth.—3. In arch. an oval dormer-window.

Oxer (oks'êr), n. Same as Ox-fence. 'Over an oxer 'like a bird.' Cornhill Mag.

Ox-eye (oks'ti), n. 1. In bot. a name common to plants of the genus Bupththalmum. The name is also given to Anthemis arvensis and to Chrysanthemum Leucanthemum. Called also the Ox-eye Daisy.—2. In zool. a name given to the larger titmouse (Parus major) and to the blue titmouse (P. ceruleus).—3. A nautical term for a cloudy speck or weather gall, often seen on the coast of Africa, which presages a storm.

Ox-eyed (oks'id), a. Having large full eyes, like those of an ox.

Homer useth that epithet of ox-eyed in describing Juno, because a round black eye is the best. Burton.

Ox-fence (oks'fens), n. A fence to keep oxen from straying; specifically, in fox-hunting, a fence consisting of a wide ditch, bordered by a strong hedge, beyond which is a railing.

Oxfly (oks'fil), n. A species of bott (Estrus bovis) hatched under the skin of cattle.

Ox-foot (oks'fôt), n. In farricry, a term applied to the feet of horses when the horn of the hindfoot cleaves just in the middle of the forepart of the hoof, from the coronet to the shoe.

Oxford-chrome (oks'fôrd-krôm), n. An oxide of iron used in oil and water-colour painting. Called also Oxford-ochre.

Oxford-clay (oks'fôrd-klâ), n. [From its being well developed in Oxfordshire.] In geol. a bed of dark-blue clay, sometimes attaining a thickness of from 200 to 500 feet, interposed between the lower and middle oolites. It abounds in ammonites and belemnites.

Oxford-mixture (oks'fôrd-miks-tûr), n. Woollen cloth of a very dark grey colour. Called also Oxford-gray, Pepper-and-salt, and Thunder-and-lightning.

Oxford-ochre (oks'fôrd-ô-kêr), n. Same as Oxford-chrome.

Oxford-school (oks'fôrd-sköl), n. A name given to that portion of the Church of England who adopted the principles of the Tracts for the Times. Called also Tractarians and Puseyites.

Ox-gall (oks'gal), n. The bitter fluid secreted by the liver of the ox, much used in the arts.

Oxgang (oks'gang), n. [Ox, and gang, going.] In anc. law, as much land as an ox can plough in a year, generally from 15 to 20 acres. The oxgang, however, was contracted or expanded according to the quality of the land, 40 acres constituting the maximum and 6 the minimum of the measure. In Scotland it is termed oxgate.

Oxgate (oks'gât), n. See OXGANG.

Ox-goat (oks'gôd), n. A long rod, with a sharp point or goad, for driving oxen.

Ox-head (oks'hêd), n. The head of an ox—a term contemptuously applied to a stupid fellow, and equal to blockhead, dolt. 'Dost make a mummer of me, ox-head?' Marston.

Oxheal, Oxheel (oks'hêl), n. A species of hellebore (Helleborus foetidus).

Ox-hide (oks'hid), n. 1. The skin of an ox. 2. A hide of land. See HIDE.

Ox-hoof (oks'hôf), n. The name given to the leaves of a species of Caulotretus and Bauhinia, used in Brazil as mucilaginous remedies.

Oxidability (oks'id-a-bil'i-ti), n. The capability of being converted into an oxide.

Oxidable (oks'id-a-bl), a. Capable of being converted into an oxide.

The first section is the metals of the earths; the second the metals of the alkalies; the third the easily oxidable metals, as iron; the fourth metals less oxidable, as copper and lead. Whewell.

Oxidate (oks'id-ât), v.t. pret. & pp. oxidated; ppr. oxidating. To convert into an oxide, as metals and other substances, by combination with oxygen.

Oxidate (oks'id-ât), v.i. To become oxidized; to become an oxide.

Iron oxidates rapidly when introduced in a state of ignition into oxygen gas. Graham.

Oxidation (oks'id-â'shon), n. The operation or process of converting into an oxide, as metals or other substances, by combining with them a certain portion of oxygen; oxidisement.

Oxidator (oks'id-ât-êr), n. A contrivance for throwing a stream of oxygen into the flame of a lamp; an oxygenator.

Oxide (oks'id), n. [Gr. oxys, acid, sharp.] In chem. a compound of oxygen with a more electro-positive element. The first, second, third, &c., oxides of one element are designated by the terms protoxide, dioxide, trioxide, &c.; the highest oxide is termed a peroxide.

Oxidizable, Oxidisable (oks'id-iz-a-bl), a. Capable of being oxidized.

Oxidize, Oxidise (oks'id-iz), v.t. To oxidate (which see).

Oxidizement, Oxidisement (oks'id-iz-ment), n. Oxidation.

Oxidizer, Oxidiser (oks'id-iz-êr), n. That which oxidizes.

Oxidulated (oks'id-û-lât-ed), a. In chem. applied to a compound containing oxygen.

Oxialt (oks'i-salt), n. See OXYSALT.

Ox-like (oks'lik), a. Resembling an ox.

Oxlip (oks'lip), n. A plant of the genus Primula (P. elatior). See PRIMULA.

As cowslip unto oxlip is,
So seems she to the boy. Tennyson.

Oxonian (oks'ô-ni-an), n. A native or inhabitant of Oxford; a member or a graduate of the University of Oxford.

Oxpecker (oks'pek-êr), n. Another name for the Beef-eater, a bird of the genus Buphaga (which see).

Ox-pith† (oks'pith), n. Marrow. Marston.

Ox-reim (oks'rim), n. [D. riem, a thong or strap.] A narrow strip of prepared ox-hide, used in the Cape Colony for horse-halters, and, twisted, for ropes, traces, &c.

Ox-stall (oks'stâl), n. A stall or stand for oxen.

Oxter (oks'têr), n. [A. Sax. oxta, the arm-pit.] The armpit; also, the embrace of the arms. [Scotch.]

Oxter (oks'têr), v.t. To support under the arm. [Scotch.]

Oxtongue (oks'tung), n. The common name of Helminthia, a plant belonging to the genus Picris, nat. order Compositæ, so called from the shape and roughness of the leaves.

Oxyacid (oks'i-as-id), n. An acid containing oxygen. Called also Ox-acid.

Oxycalcium-light (oks-i-kâl'si-um-lit), n. Same as Drummond Light.

Oxychloride (oks-i-klô'rid), n. A compound of a metallic oxide with a chloride; as, oxychlorides of iron, tin, &c.

Oxycoccus (oks-i-kok'us), n. [Gr. oxys, sharp, and kokkos, a berry.] The cranberry, a genus of plants of the nat. order Vacciniaceæ, comprising three species. O. palustris is the common cranberry, O. macrocarpus is the large-fruited American cranberry. The third species is the O. erectus, so named from not creeping like the two others.

Oxycrate (oks'i-krât), n. [Gr. oxys, acid, and krateô, to mix.] A mixture of water and vinegar. [Rare.]

Apply a mixture of the same powder, with a compress prest out of oxycrate, and a suitable bandage. Wiseman.

Oxyfluoride (oks-i-flû'ô-rid), n. A compound of an oxide and a fluoride; as, the oxyfluoride of lead.

Oxygen (oks'i-jen), n. [Gr. oxys, acid, and gennao, to generate.] 1. Sym. O. At. wt. 16. In chem. a gaseous element discovered by Priestley in 1776, by whom it was named dephlogisticated air; by Scheele it was named emphyreal air, and by Condorcet vital air. It constitutes about one-fifth of the total volume of the atmosphere, and is the supporter of ordinary combustion. It was named oxygen because it was supposed to be present in all acids; modern experiments, however, prove that it is not necessary in all cases to acidity or to combustion. Oxygen may be prepared by heating manganic dioxide or potassic chlorate; it is usually obtained from a mixture of these two salts. Oxygen is a permanently elastic fluid, invisible, inodorous, and a little heavier than atmospheric air. In mechanical mixture with nitrogen it forms atmospheric air. Water contains about 89 per cent of it, and it exists in most vegetable and animal products, acids, salts, and oxides. It is soluble in water to the extent of 30 centimetres of the gas to 1 litre of water, and this property is of great importance in relation to plants, and still more to water animals, the greater number of which are dependent on this dissolved oxygen for the support of respiration and life. It has a powerful attraction for most of the simple substances, especially for the electro-positive bodies, the act of combining with which is called oxidation. The compounds thus formed are called oxides. Oxidation is often attended with the evolution of heat and light, as in all processes of combustion in atmospheric air; sometimes the oxidation is slow and unattended with such phenomena, as in the gradual rusting of metals. Combustion is the union of inflammable matter with oxygen. (See COMBUSTION.) Oxygen gas is necessary to respiration, and no animal can live in an atmosphere which does not contain a certain portion of uncombined oxygen. Oxygen is evolved from trees and plants by the action of the sun's rays on the carbon compounds contained in the moistened leaves; and these leaves, while they give out oxygen, absorb carbonic acid from the atmosphere for their nourishment.—2. A manufacturing name for bleaching-powder. Stimmonds.

Oxygen-acid (oks'i-jen-as'id), n. In chem. an oxyacid (which see).

Oxygenate (oks'i-jen-ät), v.t. pret. & pp. oxygenated; ppr. oxygenating. To unite or cause to combine with oxygen.

Oxygenation (oks'i-jen-ä'shon), n. Same as Oxidation.

Oxygenator (oks'i-jen-ät-ër), n. Same as Oxidator.

Oxygenizable, Oxygenisable (oks'i-jen-iz-a-bl), a. Capable of being oxygenized.

Oxygenize, Oxygenise (oks'i-jen-iz), v.t. To oxygenate (which see).

Oxygenizement, Oxygenisement (oks'i-jen-iz-ment), n. Oxidation.

Oxygenizer, Oxygeniser (oks'i-jen-iz-ër), n. That which oxydates or converts into an oxide.

Oxygenous (oks-i-jen-us), a. Pertaining to or obtained from oxygen.

Oxygen, Oxygene (oks'i-gon, oks'i-gön), n. [Gr. oxyz, sharp, and gênika, an angle.] In geom. a triangle having three acute angles.

Oxygonal, Oxygonial (oks-i-g'ö-n-al, oks-i-g'ö-ni-al), a. Acute-angled.

Oxyhydrogen (oks-i-hi'ä-drö-jen), a. Of or pertaining to a mixture or combination of oxygen and hydrogen; as, oxyhydrogen gas.—Oxyhydrogen blowpipe, one used by mineralogists and chemists for reducing metallic ores in analysis. The flame is produced by the combustion of oxyhydrogen gas (usually two volumes of hydrogen to one of oxygen) instead of common air.—Oxyhydrogen lamp, one in which streams of oxygen and hydrogen in regulated quantities are commingled, the resulting flame being directed on a ball of quicklime and forming an extremely bright light.—Oxyhydrogen light, the lime-light; the Drummond light.—Oxyhydrogen microscope, one in which the object is illuminated by the flame of oxyhydrogen gas on a piece of lime under the action of the compound blowpipe. The lime is placed in front of a concave mirror, and the object between this and a convex lens; by which its image, highly magnified, is thrown upon a screen so that it may be visible to a large number of spectators.

Oxymel (oks'i-mel), n. [Gr. oxyz, acid, and meli, honey.] A mixture of vinegar and honey. Arbuthnot.

Oxymoron (oks-i-mö'ron), n. [Gr. oxymoron, a smart saying which at first view appears foolish, from oxyz, sharp, and möros, dull, foolish.] In rhet. a figure in which an epithet of a quite contrary signification is added to a word; as, cruel kindness.

Oxymuriate (oks-i-mü'ri-ät), n. An obsolete name for chloride, on the erroneous assumption that chlorine is a mixture of oxygen and muriatic acid.

Oxymuriatic (oks-i-mü'ri-at'ik), a. Formerly applied to chlorine. See OXYMURIATE.

Oxyopia, Oxyopy (oks-i-ö'pi-a, oks'i-ö-pi), n. [Gr. oxyz, acute, and opsis, vision.] Acuteness of sight, arising from increased sensibility of the retina.

Oxyphonia, Oxyphony (oks-i-fö'ni-a, oks-i-fö-ni), n. [Gr. oxyz, acute, and phöné, voice.] Acuteness or shrillness of voice.

Oxyrhynchus (oks-i-ring'us), n. [Gr. oxyz, sharp, rhynchos, beak.] An Egyptian fish, said to have been revered throughout Egypt, and sacred to the goddess Athor. It is represented both in sculptures and on coins, and was anciently embalmed.

Oxyria (oks-i'ri-a), n. [Gr. oxyz, acid.] A genus of plants, nat. order Polygonaceæ. O. reniformis (mountain-sorrel) is the only known native species. It is found on the highest mountains of Great Britain.

Oxyrrhodin (oks-i'rö-din), n. [Compounded of Gr. oxyz, acid, and rhodon, rose.] A mixture of vinegar and oil of roses, used as a liniment in herpes and erysipelas. Dunghison.

Oxysalt (oks'i-salt), n. A salt of an oxyacid. See OXYACID.

Oxysulphide (oks-i-sul'fid), n. A compound containing sulphur, oxygen, and a metal.

Oxytone (oks'i-tön), a. [Gr. oxyz, sharp, and tonos, tone.] Having an acute sound.

Oxytone (oks'i-tön), n. 1. An acute sound. 2. In Greek gram. a word having the acute accent on the last syllable.

Oxyuris (oks-i-ü'ris), [Gr. oxyz, sharp, and ouron, tail.] A genus of internal parasitic worms allied to the common Ascaris. These thread-worms multiply with rapidity, and pass from the intestine to other organs. O. vermicularis is often found in the human rectum, and is usually about $\frac{1}{2}$ inch long. See ASCARIDÆ.

Oyer (ö'yër), n. [Norm. oyer, hearing; Fr. ouïr, L. audire, to hear.] 1. In law, a hearing or trial of causes.—2. The hearing, as of a writ, bond, note, or other specialty; as when a defendant in court prays oyer of a writing.—Oyer and terminer [Fr. to hear and determine] is a commission directed to two of the judges of the circuit and other gentlemen of the county to which it is issued, by virtue of which they have power, as the terms imply, to hear and determine certain specified offences. The commissions of oyer and terminer are the most comprehensive of the several commissions which constitute the authority of the judges of assize on the circuits. A court of oyer and terminer is constituted by a commission to inquire, hear, and determine all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanours.

Oyes, Oyez (ö'yes), [Fr. oyez, hear ye.] The introduction to any proclamation made by the officer of a law court, or other public crier, in order to secure silence and attention. It is thrice repeated. Shakspeare uses oyes in the two following passages as a substantive in the sense of exclamation or proclamation. 'Crier hobgoblin, make the fairy oyes.' Merry Wives, v. 5.

On whose bright crest, Fame, with her loud'st eyes,
Cries, this is he. Troilus and Cressida, iv. 5.

Oylet (oi'let), n. 1. An oilet.—2. A scar resembling an eyelet-hole. Stormonth.

Oylet-hole (oi'let-höl), n. An eyelet-hole.

Oysanite (oi'san-it), n. Same as Oisanite.

Oyster (oi'stër), n. [O.Fr. oistre, hoyster, Mod.Fr. huître, from L. ostrea, ostreum, Gr. ostreon, an oyster, akin to osteon, a bone, and ostrakon, the hard shell of shell-fish.] A well-known edible mollusc belonging to the lamellibranchiate genus Ostrea, family Ostreidae, characterized by an inequivalve shell composed of two irregular lamellated valves, of which the convex, or under one, adheres to rocks, piles, or to the shell of another individual, in salt water which is shallow, or in the mouths of rivers. The species are numerous, and found in the seas of all temperate and warm climates. The only British species is O. edulis, of which vast beds are artificially formed, and attended to with great care, at the estuary of the Thames and many other localities, where there is a mixture of salt and fresh water, in which they best thrive. Oysters raised in artificial beds are called natives, and are considered superior to those which are dredged from the natural beds. They breed in April or May, and are edible in one and a half years, and in their prime at three years. In order to prevent the total extirpation or great diminution of the supply of oysters, a close season has been fixed, which lasts from the 1st of May to the 31st August. The fry or fertilized eggs of the oyster are collectively termed spat. Other species are O. parasitica, an oyster of excellent flavour, abundant in the swamps of warm climates, and found adhering to the roots and branches of trees within reach of the tide; and O. canadensis, or long-hinged oyster, of North America, which is very elongated. The name oyster has also been popularly given to molluscs not of the family Ostreidae, as the pearl-oyster, which is a member of the family Aviculidae.

Oyster-bed (oi'stër-bed), n. A bed or breeding place of oysters.

Oyster-catcher (oi'stër-kach-ër), n. The popular name of the birds of the genus Hematopus, belonging to the order of Grallatores, which reside on the sea-shore and feed on marine animals. H. ostralegus, the common oyster-catcher or sea-pie, is a

British species, abounding on the western coast of England. Its beak is somewhat longer than in the plover or lapwing. It is straight, pointed, compressed into a wedge, and sufficiently strong to enable it to force open the shells of small mollusca on which the bird feeds.

Oyster-dredge (oi'stër-drej), n. A small dredge or drag-net for bringing up oysters from the bottom of the sea.

Oyster-green (oi'stër-grën), n. A plant, the Uva latissima, Linn.; also called Green-laver and Green-sloke.

Oyster-knife (oi'stër-nif), n. A strong blunt knife for opening oysters.

Oysterling (oi'stër-ling), n. A young oyster; an oyster not full grown. Times.

Oyster-patty (oi'stër-pat-ti), n. A patty or pastry made with oysters.

Oyster-plant (oi'stër-plant), n. A name applied in Britain to Mertensia maritima, the leaves of which taste like oysters.

Oyster-shell (oi'stër-shel), n. The hard covering or shell of the oyster.

Oyster-wench (oi'stër-wensh), n. A woman whose occupation is to sell oysters; a low woman. Shak.

Oyster-wife, Oyster-woman (oi'stër-wif, oi'stër-wy-man), n. A female seller of oysters.

Ozena, Ozēna (ö-zë'na), n. [Gr. ozaina, from özö, to smell.] A fetid ulcer in the nostril.

Ozocerite, Ozokerite (ö-zö-së'rit, ö-zö-kë'rit), n. [Gr. özö, to smell, and keros, wax.] A fossil resin existing in the bituminous sandstones of the coal-measures. It is like resinous wax in consistence and translucency, of a brown or brownish yellow colour, and of a pleasantly aromatic odour. In Moldavia it occurs in sufficient quantities to be used for economic purposes, and it is made into candles. It consists of about 86 per cent of carbon and 14 of hydrogen.

Ozonation (ö-zön-ä'shon), n. The act or process of treating with ozone. Faraday.

Ozone (ö'zön), n. [From Gr. özö, to smell.] An allotropic modification of oxygen. The density of ozone is one-and-a-half times greater than that of oxygen. It is produced when an electric machine is worked, when a stick of phosphorus is allowed to oxidise slowly, and in various other ways. At a high temperature ozone is changed into ordinary oxygen, two volumes of the former yielding three volumes of the latter. Chemical tests show that ozone exists in the atmosphere to a minute extent, and in greater quantity in country districts than in towns, while in crowded thoroughfares it ceases to be recognizable. Ozone has a great power of destroying offensive odours, is a powerful bleacher, and an intense oxidizer.

Ozoniferous (ö-zön-if'ër-us), a. Containing or furnishing ozone. Graham.

Ozonification (ö-zön-i-fä'käs'hon), n. The act of producing ozone.

Ozonify (ö-zön-i-fä), v.t. To convert into ozone.

Ozonize (ö-zön-iz), v.t. To charge or impregnate with ozone; to convert into ozone, as oxygen. Graham.

Ozonometer (ö-zön-om-ët-ër), n. [Ozone, and Gr. metron, a measure.] An apparatus for ascertaining the presence and measuring the amount of ozone in the atmosphere.

Ozonometric (ö-zön-o-met'rik), a. Of or belonging to ozonometry; as, ozonometric observations.

Ozonometry (ö-zön-om-ët-ri), n. A term applied to the means for determining the presence and proportion of ozone in the atmosphere. Brande.

P.

P is the sixteenth letter of the English alphabet, representing a labial articulation formed by a close compression of the anterior part of the lips, as in ap or pa. It is the surd mute to which the sonant b corresponds, and as regards the method of its utterance is also allied to f, v, and m (the labial nasal). This letter always has the same sound, unless when it forms with h the digraph ph, which occurs in words of Greek origin and has the same sound as f. It is hardly ever silent in the middle of a word (though it is so in receipt), but in a number of words borrowed from the Greek, when it is initial and followed by n, s, or t, it is not sounded. Such words are pneumatics, psalm, psalter, pterodactyl, pteropod; in piannigan, which is from the Gaelic, it has been unwarrantably inserted. At the end of a syllable, before s or t, it is pronounced along with these letters, as in wraps, lapse, attempt, and no other consonants can form part of a syllable with it in this position. It is often initial with l or r after it, or with s before it, as in play, pray, spring, and often final after l, m, r, and s, as in help, hemp, jump, harp, grasp, wasps. In several words it has been inserted to form a transition between an m and an s or t, as in tempt, sempstress, Thompson; comp. the old nempne, to name. In lobster, cobweb it has become b; in purse, gossip b has become p. In the oldest stage of English and the other Teutonic languages p rarely occurs as the initial sound of words. In the ancient Anglo-Saxon poems some seven examples have been counted (path and play are two of them), and about the same number in the Gothic of Ulfilas, while in the ancient Icelandic or Norse poems of the heathen age they are even fewer in number. (Vigfusson.) This phenomenon corresponds to the similar rarity of initial b in the Greek and Latin languages, b by Grimm's law answering to Teutonic p. It consequently follows that the vast majority of words beginning with p that are now English have been borrowed from various sources in historical times, some of them being of doubtful origin, while many of them are directly from the French, Latin, and Greek.—In abbreviations P.M. stands for post meridiem (afternoon); P.S. for postscript; p, in music, signifies piano, softly; pp, pizz, piano, more softly.—To mind one's P's and Q's, or to be on one's P's and Q's, is a colloquial phrase signifying to be very careful in behaviour, the origin of it being unknown.

Pa (pā), n. A childish or shorter form of Papa.

Paage† (pā'āj), n. [O.Fr. paage, Mod. Fr. peage, Fr. pezagte, It. pedaggio, from L.L. pedaticum, from pes, pedis, a foot.] A toll for passage over another person's grounds. Burke.

Paas (pas), n. [D. paasch. See PASCH.] The Easter festival. [United States.]

Paat (pāt), n. An Indian name of the jute plant, belonging to the genus Corchorus. See CORCHORUS and JUTE.

Pabs (pabz), n. pl. The refuse of flax. [Scotch.]

Pabular (pab'ū-lēr), a. [L. pabulum, food, from stem of pasco, pastum, to feed. See PASTOR.] Pertaining to food; affording food or aliment. Johnson.

Pabulation† (pab'ū-lā'shon), n. [L. pabulatio, from pabulum, to feed.] 1. The act of feeding or procuring provender.—2. Food; fodder.

Pabulous† (pab'ū-lus), a. [L. pabulum, food.] Affording aliment or food; alimentary. Sir T. Browne.

Pabulum (pab'ū-lum), n. [L. See PABULAR.] 1. That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment; often used figuratively of intellectual food, food for the intellectual faculties.—2. That which feeds a fire; fuel. Bp. Berkeley.

Paca (pā'ka), n. [Braz. and Pg. paca, from pak, pag, the native name.] A genus of rodent animals (Calogenys) inhabiting South America and the West Indies, and allied to the agoutis, caviés, and capybara. The common paca (C. paca) is one of the largest of the rodents, being about 2 feet long and about 1 foot in height; its form is thick and clumsy, and the hinder limbs are much longer (but considerably bent) than the anterior ones. It lives in moist grounds, burrowing like the rabbit, but not so deeply, its burrow being always provided with three openings. It feeds on vegetable substances, and is very destructive to plantations. Its flesh is very fat, and is much esteemed.

Common Paca (Calogenys Paca).

Pacable (pā'ka-bi), a. Capable of being pacified; pacifiable; placable. Coleridge.

Pacate (pā'kāt), a. [L. pacatus, pp. of paco, pacatum, to pacify, from paz, pacis, peace.] Peaceful; tranquil.

Pacated (pā'kāt-ed), a. Appeased. [Rare.]

Pacation (pā'kā'shon), n. [L. paco, to calm or appease.] The act of pacifying or appeasing.

Pacation (pā'kā'), n. A Peruvian tree (Prosopis dulcis) of the nat. order Leguminosæ, suborder Mimoseæ. It produces pods 20 inches to 2 feet long, which inclose black seeds imbedded in a pure white flaky substance. This substance is much esteemed in Peru as an article of diet.

Paccan (pak'an), n. A species of hickory. The plant is exclusively North American. See PECAN.

Pacchionian (pak-ki-ō'ni-an), a. [After Pacchioni, an Italian anatomist.] Of or belonging to Pacchioni.—Pacchionian glands or bodies, in anat. small whitish or yellowish bodies, sometimes separate, at others united like a bunch of grapes, which are observed in several parts of the dura and pia mater. They receive vessels, but apparently no nerves. Their texture and uses are unknown.

Pace (pās), n. [Fr. pas, from L. passus, a step, lit. a stretching out of the feet in walking, from pando, passum, to stretch out. Pass has the same origin.] 1. A single change of the foot in walking; a step.—2. A linear measure of uncertain extent, representing the space naturally measured by the change of the foot in walking. In some cases the term is applied to the distance from the place where either foot is taken up to that where the same foot is set down, being assumed by some to be 5 feet, and by others 4½ feet; this pace of a double step being called the geometrical pace. The pace of a single step (the military pace) is estimated at 2½ feet. The ancient Roman pace, considered as the thousandth part of a mile, was 5 Roman feet, and each foot contained between 11 60 and 11 64 English inches; hence, the pace was about 58½ English inches.—3. Manner of walking; walk; gait; as, a languishing pace; a heavy pace; a quick or slow pace.

But on rode these strange horsemen,
With slow and lordly pace. Macaulay.

4. A step, measure, or piece of procedure. [Rare.]

The first pace necessary for his majesty is to fall into confidence with Spain. Sir W. Temple.

5. A mode of stepping, among horses, in which the legs on the same side are lifted together; an amble. 'Whether pace or trot.' Hudibras. In a wider sense the pace is of four kinds, including the walk, the trot, and the gallop, as well as the amble.—6. Degree of celerity; rate of progress.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day. Shak.

7. A portion of a floor slightly raised above the general level; a dais; a broad step or slightly raised space above some level.—To keep or hold pace with, to keep up with; to go or move as fast as; literally or figuratively.

In intellect and attainments he kept pace with his age. Southey.

Face (pās), v. i. pret. & pp. paced; ppr. acing.

1. To step; to walk; to move; especially, to step slowly or with measured tread; to stride. 'Pacing through the forest.' Shak. 2. To make haste; to hasten. 'With speed so pace to speak of Perdita.' Shak.—3. To move by lifting the legs on the same side together, as a horse; to amble.

Face (pās), v. t. 1. To measure by steps; as, to pace a piece of ground.—2.† To teach to go as a rider wishes; to break in; hence, to regulate in motion.

If you can, face your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go. Shak.

3. To walk over with measured paces; as, the sentinel paces his round.

Face,† v. i. or t. To pass away; to surpass; to exceed. Chaucer.

Paced (pāst), p. and a. 1. Having a particular gait: used chiefly in composition; as, slow-paced.—2. Trained in paces, as a horse; broken in; taught how to behave. Shak. Hence—Thorough-paced, lit. thoroughly trained; out-and-out; as, a thorough-paced intriguer, scoundrel, &c.

Pacer (pā'ser), n. One that paces; a horse well-trained in pacing.

Pacha (pa-shā'), n. [French spelling.] Same as Pasha.

Pachacamac (pach'a-kam-ak), n. The name given by the ancient Peruvians to the being whom they worshipped as the creator of the universe, and who was held by them in the highest veneration.

Pachalic, n. and a. See PASHALIC.

Pachana (pā'cha-na), n. [Hind.] A bitter tonic infusion prepared in India from Tinospora cordifolia.

Pachira (pa-kī'ra), n. A genus of tropical American trees belonging to the Sterculiaceæ, and differing from Adansonia, the baobab tree, in the calyx being cup-shaped and entire, not five-toothed. The species are small or large trees, with digitate leaves, and the fruit is an oval woody one-celled capsule, opening by a number of divisions, and containing numerous seeds. P. alba is one of the most useful trees in New Granada, the inner bark furnishing a strong durable cordage. The wool of the seeds of P. Barrigon is used to stuff pillows, cushions, &c. Several of the species yield useful timber. The largest flowered species, P. macrocarpa, is found in Brazil. It attains a height of 100 feet and has flowers 15 inches long. The younger Linnaeus, in ignorance that Aublet had previously given the name Pachira to the genus, gave it the name of Carotinea, in honour of the Princess Sophia Caroline of Baden, and under this name the plants are familiar in our hothouses.

Pachometer (pa-kom'et-ēr), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and metron, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the thickness of the glass of mirrors.

Pachyblepharosis (pak'i-blef-a-rō'sis), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and blepharon, the eyelid.] The thickening of the tissue of the eyelid from chronic inflammation.

Pachycarpous (pak-i-kār'pus), a. [Gr. pachys, thick, and karpous, fruit.] In bot. having the pericarp very thick.

Pachycormus (pak-i-kor'mus), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and kormos, body.] A genus of fossil sauroid fishes found in the lias, so named from their robust bodies.

Pachydactyl (pak-i-dak'til), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and dactylus, a toe.] A bird or other animal having thick toes.

Pachydactylous (pak-i-dak'til-us), a. [See above.] Thick-toed.

Pachydendron (pak-i-den'dron), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and dendron, a tree.] A section of the liliaceous genus Aloë. The species are arborescent plants of the Cape of Good Hope, with crowded leaves at the top of the caudex, and nodding flowers in a terminal spike.

Pachyderm (pak-i-dērm), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and derma, skin.] A non-ruminant hoofed animal; a member of the Cuvierian order Pachydermata.

Pachydermal (pak-i-dēr'mal), a. Of or relating to the pachyderms; as, pachydermal dentition.

Pachydermata (pak-i-dēr'ma-ta), n. pl. An old mammalian order constituted by Cuvier for the reception of quadrupeds which have hoofs, but do not ruminates, including the elephant, mastodon, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, tapir, horse, hog, &c. The group is now divided among Proboscidea, Artiodactyla and Perissodactyla (which see).

Pachydermatoid (pak-i-dér-ma-toid), a. Related to the pachyderms or thick-skinned mammals.

Pachydermatous (pak-i-dér-ma-tus), a. Relating to a pachyderm or to the order Pachydermata; thick-skinned; hence fig. applied to persons, not sensitive to ridicule, sarcasm, or the like.

Pachyglossæ (pak-i-glos'sè), n. pl. [Gr. pachys, thick, and glossa, the tongue.] A section of saurian reptiles characterized by a thick fleshy tongue, convex, with a slight nick at the end. It embraced the families of the chameleons, geckos, iguanas, and agamas, but is now restricted to the two latter.

Pachypterous (pak-i-oy'tér-us), a. [Gr. pachys, thick, and pteron, a wing.] Thick-winged.

Pachyote (pak-i-ót), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and ous, otos, an ear.] One of a family of bats characterized by thick external ears.

Pachypteris (pa-kip'tér-is), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and ptéris, a fern with feathery leaves, pteron, a feather.] A genus of fossil ferns characterized by thick rigid leaves. They occur chiefly in the lower oolite.

Pachyrhizodus (pak-i-riz-o-dus), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, rhiza, a root, and odus, a tooth.] A genus of fossil cycloid fishes characterized by having circular bluntly conical teeth, thick at the base. They occur in the upper chalk.

Pachyrhizus (pak-i-riz-us), n. [Gr. pachyrhizos, from pachys, thick, and rhiza, a root.] A genus of tropical leguminous plants of both hemispheres, one of whose species, P. angulatus, produces fleshy roots, often 6 or 8 feet long and of the thickness of a man's thigh, used in times of scarcity as an article of diet. The Fijians use the fibre of its twining stems in the construction of fishing-nets.

Pachyspondylus (pak-i-spon'di-lus), n. [Gr. pachys, thick, and spondylos, a joint of the backbone.] The fossil vertebra of certain large sauroid South African reptiles, supposed to be of the triassic age.

Pachystichous (pa-kis'ti-kus), a. [Gr. pachys, thick, and stichos, a row.] Thick-sided. In bot. a term applied to cells having thick sides.

Pacifiable (pas-i-fí-a-bl), a. Capable of being pacified.

Pacific (pa-sí-fik), a. [L. pacificus, from pacifico, to make peace. See PACIFY.] 1. persons. Second, an apartment forbidden to all but Brahmans. Third and last, the cell of the deity or idol inclosed with a massy gate. Pagodas are generally of a pyramidal form, and of a number of stories. The name is also given to Buddhist temples in Siam, Burmah, and China.—2.† An idol; an image of some supposed deity. Stillingfleet.—3. A gold or silver coin current in Hindustan, of different values in different parts of India, from 8s. to 9s. sterling.

Pagoda-stone (pa-gô-da-stôn), n. A limestone found in China inclosing numerous fossil orthoceratites, whose septa when cut present a resemblance to a pagoda. The Chinese believe that the fossils are engendered in the rock by the shadows of the pagodas that stand above them.

Pagodite (pa-gôd'it), n. A name given to the mineral which the Chinese carve into figures of pagodas, images of idols, and ornaments. It is called also Agalmatolite and Figure-stone.

Pagrus (pag'rus), n. [L. pagrus, Gr. pagros, an unknown fish.] A genus of acanthopterygian fishes, of the sparoid or beam family, containing the braise or becker (P. vulgaris), and Couch's sea-bream (P. orphus), both found on the British coasts, though the latter is rare. The becker weighs five or six pounds. It is mainly of a bright red colour.

Paguma (pa-gû-ma), n. A name of several mammals of the genus Paradoxurus, of the family Viverridae (civets and genets), inhabiting Eastern Asia. The masked paguma (P. larvatus) is called masked on account of the white streak down the forehead and nose, and the white circle round the eyes, which gives the creature an aspect as if it wore an artificial mask. It has been found in China, whence several specimens have been brought to England.

Pagurian (pa-gū'ri-an), n. A crustacean belonging to the genus Pagurus.

Paguridæ (pa-gū'ri-dē), n. pl. [L. pagurus, Gr. pagouros, a kind of crab, from pag, root of pēgnymi, to fix, oura, a tail, and eidōs, resemblance.] A tribe of anomonous decapod crustaceans, of which the genus Pagurus, or hermit-crabs, is the type. Most of the species of this family inhabit the deserted shells of molluscs, such as the whelk, which they change for a larger one as they increase in size. They are provided with a terminal caudal sucker, and with two or three pairs of rudimentary feet, by means of which they retain their position in their borrowed dwelling. The carapace is not strong, but the claws are well developed, one being always larger than the other. The most common British species is Pagurus Bernhardus; the species shown in the cut is a rather large and handsome crab inhabiting Brazil and the West Indies.

Pagurus (pa-gū'rus), n. [See PAGURIDÆ.] A genus of anomonous crustaceans, known by the name of soldier and hermit crabs. See PAGURIDÆ.

Paint (pānt), n. 1. A colouring substance; a substance used in painting, either simple or compound; a pigment; as, a white paint or red paint.—2. Colour laid on the face; rouge.

All paints may be said to be noxious. They injure the skin, obstruct perspiration, and thus frequently lay the foundation for cutaneous affections. Dunglison.

Painter (pānt'ēr), n. One whose occupation is to paint; an artist who represents the appearance of the objects of nature on a plane or other surface by means of colours.

Speaking with strict propriety, therefore, we should call a man a great painter only as he excelled in precision and force in the language of lines, and a great versifier, as he excelled in precision or force in the language of words. . . . As I have said, the business of a painter is to paint. If he colour he is a painter, though he can do nothing else; if he cannot colour, he is no painter, though he may do everything else. Ruskin.

—Painter's colic, a disease to which painters, plumbers, and those who work with poisonous preparations of lead, or in any way receive them into the system, are peculiarly liable. The principal symptoms are violent pains in the abdomen, obstinate constipation, and cramps in the limbs. Called also Lead colic, Devonshire colic, Metallic colic, &c.

Paintership (pānt'ēr-ship), n. The state or condition of being a painter. [Rare.]

Admit also a curious, cunning painter to be the chief painter; let him strive also to continue still in his chief paintership, lest another pass him in cunning. Bp. Gardner.

Painter-stainer (pānt'ēr-stān-ēr), n. 1. A painter of coats of arms.—2. A member of the livery company or guild in London bearing this name.

Painting (pānt'ing), n. 1. The act, art, or employment of laying on colours; the art of forming figures or representing objects in colours on canvas or other material; or the art of representing, by means of figures and colours on a plane surface, all objects presented to the eye or to the imagination, so as to produce the appearance of relief.

Painting, or art generally as such, with all its technicalities, difficulties, and particular ends, is nothing but a noble and expressive language, invaluable as the vehicle of thought, but by itself nothing. . . . What do you at present mean by historical painting? Now-a-days, it means endeavouring, by the power of imagination, to portray some historical event of past days. But in the middle ages, it meant representing the acts of their own days; and that is the only historical painting worth a straw. Ruskin.

2. A picture; a likeness or resemblance in colours.

This is the very painting of your fear. Shak.

3. Colours laid on. 'This painting wherein you see me smeared.' Shak.

Paintless (pānt'les), a. Incapable of being painted or represented; not to be painted or described.

Two things of a kind, similar in form, applied to the same purpose, and suited to each other or used together; as, a pair of gloves or stockings; a pair of shoes. Also applied to a single thing composed essentially of two pieces suiting each other, and used only in the plural form; as, a pair of scissors; a pair of trousers.—2. Two of a sort; a couple; a brace; as, a pair of nerves. 'A pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons.' Luke ii. 4.—3. Distinctively, a man and wife.

Oh when meet now

Such pairs in love and mutual honour join'd? Millen.

4. In mining, a gang or party of men; in this sense spelled also Paré.—5. In parliament, two members belonging to opposite parties who agree not to vote for a specified time. See PAIRING.—Pair formerly had a sense equal to a set of things, or designated an apparatus with its belongings; thus, a pair of cards was a pack of cards; a pair of galleys was a galleys fully equipped. We still speak of a pair of stairs for a flight of stairs or steps. 'A garret up four pair of stairs.' Macaulay.

I ha' nothing but my skin,

And clothes; my sword here, and myself;

Two crowns in my pocket, two pair of cards;

And three false dice. Beau. & Fl.

What talkest thou to me of the hangman? If I hang, I'll make a fat pair of galleys; for if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he is no starveling. Shak.

Pair (pär), v.t. 1. To be joined in pairs; to couple; as, birds pair in summer.—2. To suit; to fit, as a counterpart.

Ethelinda,

My heart was made to fit and pair with thine. Rowe.

—To pair, to pair off, (a) to depart from a company in pairs or couples. (b) To abstain from voting on arrangement with a member of the opposite party to do the same: said of members of parliament. See PAIRING.

Pair (pär), v.t. 1. To unite in couples. 'Minds . . . paired by heaven.' Dryden. 2. To unite or assort in twos as correspondent or adapted to each other. 'Glossy jet is paired with shining white.' Pope.

Pair, Pair, Pair, v.t. To impair; to hurt; to injure. Charver.

Pairer (pär'ër), n. One who impairs or injures. Wickliffe.

Pairing, Pairing Off (pär'ing, pär'ing of), n. In parliament, a practice by which a member whose opinions would lead him to vote on one side of a question agrees with a member on the opposite side that they both shall be absent for a specified time, so that a vote is neutralized on each side.

Pairing-time (pär'ing-tim), n. The time when birds couple. Couper.

Pairment (pär'ment), n. Injury; damage. Wickliffe.

Pair-royal (pär-rö'al), n. Three similar things; specifically, three cards of a sort at certain games, as three kings, three queens, &c. Double pair-royal, four similar cards, as four kings. Written also Parial and Prial.

Hath that great pair-royal
Of adamant sisters (the Fates) late made trial
Of some new trade. Quarles.

Pairwise (pär'wiz), adv. In pairs.

Such as continued refractory hetied together by the beards, and hung pairwise over poles. Carlyle.

Pais, n. [Fr. pays, country.] In law, the people out of whom a jury is taken.

Paise (páz), n. Weight. 'A stone of such a paise.' Chapman. See POISE.

Paise (páz), v.t. To weigh or poise. 'With just balance pais'd.' Ph. Fletcher.

Paixhan Gun (páks'han gun), n. [From the name of the inventor.] A howitzer for the horizontal firing of heavy shells, introduced by the French general Paixhan about 1830.

Peacock. A word found in editions of Shakespeare, old and new, in Hamlet, act iii. sc. 2, and usually explained as meaning peacock. Perhaps the proper reading is patchcock, a word used by Spenser for a low or mean person.

Pakfong (pak'fong), n. See PACKFONG.

Pal, Pall (pal), n. Mate; partner; accomplice; chum. [Slang.]

Pal is a common cant word for brother or friend, and it is purely Gipsy, having come directly from that language without the slightest change. On the Continent it is palao or pral. In England it sometimes takes the form of pel. C. G. Leland.

Palabra (pá-lä'bra), n. [Sp.] A word. Shakespeare makes Dogberry use palabras ignorantly for pocas palabras, that is, few words.

Palace (pal'äs), n. [Fr. palais, from L. Palatium, one of the seven hills on which Rome was built, and that on which Augustus had his residence, whence the name was given to his house.] 1. The house in which an emperor, a king, or other distinguished person resides; as, an imperial palace; a royal palace; a pontifical palace; a dual palace; a bishop's palace.—2. A splendid place of residence; a stately or magnificent mansion. Addison.

Palace-court (pal'äs-kört), n. The court of the sovereign's palace of Westminster, which had jurisdiction of personal actions arising within the limits of 12 miles round the palace, excepting the city of London. This court was instituted in 1664, and abolished in 1849.

Palacious (pal'ä'shus), a. Palatial; royal; noble; magnificent. Graunt.

Paladin (pal'a-din), n. [Fr. and Sp. paladin, from L. palatinus, attached to the palace, from palatium. (See PALACE.) The twelve peers of France to whom the name was first applied lived in the palace of Charlemagne.] A knight-errant; a heroic champion; an eminent hero.

The Count Palatine was, in theory, the official who had the superintendence of the households of the Carolingian emperor. As the foremost of the twelve peers of France, the Count Palatine took a prominent place in mediæval romance, and a paladin is the impersonification of chivalrous devotion. Isaac Taylor.

Palæarctic (päl-är'k'tik), a. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and E. arctic.] One of the six regions into which zoologists divide the surface of the earth, based on their characteristic fauna or collection of animal life. The palæarctic region embraces Europe, Africa north of the Atlas range, and Northern Asia.

Palæaster (päl-as'tër), n. A genus of fossil star-fishes of the Silurian system. The species present so many anomalies that the genus cannot be referred to any existing family.

Palæechinus, Palæechinus (päl-ek'i-nus, päl-ki'nus), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and echinos, sea-urchin.] A genus of fossil sea-urchins or cidarites occurring in the carboniferous limestone. It is the type of a family, Palæchinidae.

A. Nicholson.*

Palæocrystic (päl-ö-kris'tik), a. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and kryos, frost.] Frozen from old; remaining frozen from antiquity; applied to both the Arctic and Antarctic seas as perpetually covered with ice of unknown ages, or to such ice.

A special name is much needed to distinguish this ice from ordinary old pack. The name palæocrystic was adopted by the officers of the Alert and the Discovery in 1875-6. Capt. Markham.

Palæoethnological (päl-ö-eth-no-löj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to the science of palæoethnology.

Palæoethnologist (päl-ö-eth-nol'o-jist), n. One versed in palæoethnology.

Palæoethnology (päl-ö-eth-nol'o-jí), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, ethnos, a people, and logos, a discourse.] The ethnology of the earliest times.

Palæogean (päl-ö-jé'an), a. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and gê, the earth.] Belonging to the former conditions of the earth's surface as revealed by geology, as distinct from the existing terraqueous aspects as described by geography. Page.

Palæographer (päl-ö-gra-fër), n. One skilled in palæography.

Palæographic, Palæographical (päl-ö-graf'ik, päl-ö-graf'ik-al), a. Of or pertaining to palæography.

Palæographist (päl-ö-gra-fist), n. A palæographer.

Palæography (päl-ö-gra-fi), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and graphô, I write.] 1. An ancient manner of writing; or, more generally, ancient writings collectively.—2. The science or art of deciphering ancient documents or inscriptions, including the knowledge of the various characters used at different periods by the writers and sculptors of different nations and languages, their usual abbreviations, &c.; the study of ancient written or inscribed documents and modes of writing.

Palæoichthyology (päl-ö-ik-thi-ol'o-jí), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, ichthys, a fish, and logos, a discourse.] The science of fossil fishes.

Palæolithic (päl-ö-lith'ik), a. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and lithos, a stone.] In archæol. of or belonging to the earlier stone period of prehistoric history.

We now come to the advent of palæolithic man upon the scene. The discovery that man was living at the same time with the extinct Mammalia in the valley of the Somme, made by M. Boucher de Perthes many years before, was fully recognized in 1859. Edin. Rev.

Palæologist (päl-ö-lö-jist), n. One conversant with palæology; a student of or one who writes on antiquity.

Palæology (päl-ö-lö-jí), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and logos, a discourse.] A discourse or treatise on antiquities, or the knowledge of ancient things; archæology.

Palæomys (päl-ö-mis), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and mys, a mouse.] A genus of fossil rodents, allied to the beavers, from the Epplesheim sand.

Palæoniscus (päl-ö-nis'kus), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and oniskos, a fish.] A genus of fossil fishes belonging to the lepidosteid family of ganoid fishes. The species range from the carboniferous to the trias.

Palæontographical (päl-ö-on'tö-graf'ik-al), a. Relating to palæontology or the description of fossils.

Palæontology (päl-ö-on-tog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, onta, beings, and graphô, I write.] The description of fossil remains.

Palæontological (päl-ö-on-tö-löj'ik-al), a. Relating to palæontology.

Palæontologically (päl-ö-on-tö-löj'ik-al-li), adv. In a palæontological sense; from a palæontological point of view.

Palæontologically, the gasteropods or true univalves have been on the increase since palæozoic times. Page.

Palæontologist (päl-ö-on-töl'o-jist), n. One who studies or is versed in palæontology or the history of fossil remains.

Palæontology (päl-ö-on-töl'o-jí), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, onta, beings, and logos, a discourse.] The science of the ancient life of the earth; that branch of biological science which treats of fossil organic remains.

Another general fact, referred to by Mr. Darwin as one which palæontology has made tolerably certain, is that forms and groups of forms which have once disappeared from the earth do not reappear. H. Spencer.

Palæophis (päl-ö-fis), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and ophis, a serpent.] A genus of fossil serpents allied to the pythons, forming the earliest record of this ordinal type. The P. typhæus of the eocene beds of Bracklesham seems to have been a boa-constrictor-like snake about 20 feet long.

Palæophytology (päl-ö-fi-töl'o-jí), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, phyton, a plant, and logos, a discourse.] That branch of palæontology which treats of fossil plants or vegetable remains.

Palæornis (pā-lē-or'nīs), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and ornis, a bird.] An extensive genus of parakeets.

Palæostren (pā-lē-ō-sī'ren), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and stren, L. siren, a mermaid.] A fossil reptile so named from its apparent affinity to the existing salamander. Its remains occur in the lower Permian.

Palæospalax (pā-lē-ōs'pā-laks), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and spalax, a mole.] A name given to an animal identical with, or very closely allied to the existing mole, but as large as a hedgehog, whose remains have been found along with those of the elephant, deer, and beaver in a lacustrine deposit on the coast of Norfolk.

Palæotherian (pā-lē-ō-thē'ri-an), a. Pertaining to the palæotherium.

Palæotherium (pā-lē-ō-thē'ri-um), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and thērion, a wild beast.] The name of a genus of extinct pachyderms found in the eocene strata of Europe and America, characterized by having twenty-eight complex molar teeth, four canines, and twelve incisors, four in each jaw. The palæotherium possessed three toes to each foot, and had probably a short fleshy proboscis. About twelve species are already known, varying from the size of a horse to that of a hog. The palæotherium holds a place intermediate between the rhinoceros, the horse, and the tapir.

Palæoxylon (pā-lē-ōks'il-on), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and xylon, wood.] A name applied to certain fossil stems of conifers found in the coal-measures, but characterized by thick medullary rays not found in existing conifers.

Palæozoic (pā-lē-ō-zō'ik), a. [Gr. palaios, ancient, and zōē, life.] In geol. applied to the lowest division of stratified groups, as distinguished from the Mesozoic and Cainozoic, as also to the life of the period. It includes the Laurentian, Cambrian, Silurian, Devonian, Old Red Sandstone, Carboniferous, and Permian systems. The divisions are based on the characters of their organic remains.

Palæozoology (pā-lē-ō-zō-ol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, zōon, an animal, and logos, a discourse.] That branch of biology which concerns itself with the fossil remains of animals.

Palæstra (pā-lēs'tra), n. See PALESTRA.

Palætiological (pā-lē-shi-ō-loj'ik-al), a. Of or belonging to palætiology.

All palætiological sciences, all speculations which attempt to ascend from the present to the remote past, by the chain of causation, do also, by an inevitable consequence, urge us to look for the beginning of the state of things which we thus contemplate. Whewell.

Palætiologist (pā-lē-shi-ol'ō-jist), n. An investigator by the method of palætiology.

Cuvier's assertion that the geologist is an antiquary of a new order, is perfectly correct, for both are palætiologists. Whewell.

Palætiology (pā-lē-shi-ol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, aitia, a cause, and logos, a discourse.] That science, mode of speculation, or investigation, which explains past conditions by the law of causation, by reasoning from present conditions, or which endeavour to ascend to a past state of things by the aid of the evidence of the present.

Palagonite (pā-lag'on-it), n. A mineral found as an ingredient of the volcanic tufa near Palagonia in Sicily, as also in Iceland. It is a hydrous silicate of protoxide of iron, with alumina, lime, magnesia, &c.

Palæitiological (pā-lē-shi-ō-loj'ik-al), a. Same as Palætiological. Edin. Rev.

Palamedea (pā-lā-mē-dē-a), n. A genus of birds belonging to the section Macrodyteli of the order Grallatores, allied to the jacanas and the rails, but having also affinities to the ducks. The P. cornuta (horned screamer or kamichi) is a South American bird larger than a common goose, remarkable for having its wings armed with two strong spurs (useful in defending itself against snakes, Palamedea cornuta (Horned Screamer).

&c.), and its head having a long slender horn-like appendage growing from the skin. It is found in Brazil and Gulana, where it lives in marshy or inundated places, which it makes to resound with its wild and loud cry. Its food consists chiefly of vegetable substances. The upper plumage in general is blackish-brown.

Palamedeidae (pā-lā-mē-dē'i-dē), n. pl. The screamers, a family of birds of which the genus Palamedea is the type.

Palankas (pā-lan'kas), n. Milit. a kind of permanent entrenched camp attached to frontier fortresses. [Turkey.]

Palanquin, Palankeen (pā-lan-kēn), n. [Fr. and Pg. palanquin; Javanese palangki, palangkan.] A covered conveyance used in India, China, &c., borne by poles on the shoulders of men, and in which a single person is carried from place to place. The palanquin proper is a sort of box about 8 feet long, 4 feet wide, and as much in height, with wooden shutters on the venetian blind principle. It used to be a very common conveyance in India, especially among the Europeans, but the introduction of railways and the improvement of the roads have almost caused its discontinuance. Written also Palankee and Palkee.

Palanquin.

Palapteryx, Palapterix (pā-lap'tēr-iks), n. [Gr. palaios, ancient, a. without, and pteryx, a wing.] A genus of struthious birds whose remains are found along with those of the dinornis in the river-silt deposits of New Zealand. Its remains evidence that it, like the gigantic dinornis, was closely allied to the living wingless apteryx.

Palatable (pā-lat-a-bl), a. Agreeable to the taste or palate; savoury; such as may be relished.

There is nothing so difficult as the art of making advice agreeable. How many devices have been made use of to render this bitter potion palatable. Addison.

Palatableness (pā-lat-a-bl-nes), n. The quality of being palatable, or agreeable to the taste.

Palatably (pā-lat-a-bli), adv. In a palatable manner; agreeably.

Palatal (pā-lat-al), a. 1. Pertaining to the palate. 'Palatal arteries.' Dunglison. — 2. Uttered by the aid of the palate, as certain sounds; thus, ch in church is a palatal consonant, and e a palatal vowel.

Palatal (pā-lat-al), a. A sound pronounced by the aid of the palate; that of ch in church, and that of j.

Palate (pā-lāt), n. [L. palatum, the palate.] 1. The roof or upper part of the mouth. In man the palate is composed of two parts, one of which, called the hard palate, forms an arch in the anterior part of the mouth, and the other, called the soft palate, lying in the posterior part of the mouth, consists of a membranous curtain of muscular and cellular tissue, from the middle of which hangs the uvula. — 2. Taste; relish. 'Hard task to hit the palates of such guests.' Pope. [This signification of the word originated in the erroneous opinion that the palate is the organ of taste.] — 3. The power of relishing mentally; intellectual taste.

Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as dressed up by the schoolmen. T. Baker.

4. In bot. the convex base of the lower lip of a personate corolla.

Palatinat (pā-lā'tin-āt), n. [Fr. palatinat. See PALATINE.] The province or seignory of a palatine; as, the palatinat of the Rhine.

Palatine (pā-lā'tin), a. [Fr. palatin, from L. palatinus, from palatinum, palace. See PALACE.] Pertaining to a palace; an epithet applied originally to persons holding an office or employment in the king's palace; hence it imports possessing royal privileges; as, a count palatine. — County palatine is a county over which an earl, bishop, or duke had a royal jurisdiction. In England formerly were three counties palatine: Chester, Durham, and Lancaster — the two former by prescription, the latter by grant of Edward III. They were so called because the proprietors, the Earl of Chester, the Bishop of Durham, and the Duke of Lancaster possessed royal rights as fully as the king in his palace. The rights of the counties palatine are now vested in the crown.

Palatine (pā-lā'tin), n. One invested with royal privileges and rights; a count palatine. In mediæval France and Germany there were palatines attached to the court and palace of the sovereign for the purpose of assisting the latter in his judicial duties. Later, in these and in other countries, they were detached from the court and placed in charge of remote or turbulent provinces, where they maintained a court and palace in the sovereign's name.

Palative (pā-lā'tiv), a. Pleasing to the taste; palatable. 'Glut not thyself with palatine delights.' Sir T. Browne.

Palaver (pā-lā'vēr), n. [Pg. palavra, Sp. palabra, a word, from L. parabola, a comparison, a parable, in late times a word, from Gr. parabolē, a placing beside, a comparison. See PARABLE. The word comes to us from the west coast of Africa, where Portuguese was the chief language of intercourse with Europeans.] 1. A talking; superfluous or idle talk. — 2. Flattery; adulation; talk intended to deceive. [Vulgar.] — 3. Talk; conversation; conference. This is the sense in which it is used in Africa, and now sometimes in this country. 'In this country and epoch of parliaments and eloquent palavers.' Carlyle.

Palaver (pā-lā'vēr), v. t. To flatter; to humbug by words. Grose. [Vulgar.]

Palaver (pā-lā'vēr), v. i. To talk idly; to indulge in a palaver or palavers.

2. The transition from one state into another observed in insects, and in each of which the insect appears in a totally different form.—3. The production of animals either from a pre-existent living organism, on which they are parasites, or from putrescent animal matter. Brande & Cox.—4. In geol. one of the great geological changes which the earth has undergone.

Palingenetic (pal'in-je-net'ik), a. Pertaining to palingenesis.

Paling-man† (pā'ling-man), n. One born within that part of Ireland called the English pale.

Palinode (pal'in-ōd), n. [Gr. palinōdia—palin, again, and ōde, a song.] 1. A poetical recantation or declaration contrary to a former one; a piece in which a poet retracts the invectives contained in a former satire; hence, a recantation in general.—2. In Scots law, a solemn recantation demanded in addition to damages in actions on account of slander or defamation raised in the commissary court, and even in the sheriff court.

Palinodial (pal-i-nō'di-al), a. Relating to or in the manner of a palinode.

Palinodist (pal-in-ōd'ist), n. A writer of palinodes.

Palinody† (pal'in-ō-di), n. A palinode.

Palisade (pal-i-sād'), n. [Fr. palissade, from palisser, to pale up, and that from palis, a paling, from L. palis, a stake. See PALE.] 1. In fort., a fence or fortification consisting of a row of strong stakes or posts set firmly in the ground, often placed vertically at the foot of the slope of the counterscarp, or presented at an angle at the foot of a parapet; also applied to one of the stakes.—2. A fence of pales or stakes driven into the ground to form an inclosure, or for the protection of property.

Palisade (pal-i-sād'), v.t. pret. & pp. palisaded; ppr. palisading. To surround, inclose, or fortify with palisades.

Palisado, v. and n. Same as Palisade.

Palisander (pal-i-san'dēr), n. [Fr. palisandre.] The continental name for rosewood. Some French cabinet-makers give this name also to violet-wood and to a striped variety of ebony.

Palish (pal'ish), a. Somewhat pale or wan; as, a palish blue.

Palissy-ware (pal'is-i-wär), n. A peculiar kind of pottery, remarkable for its beautiful glaze, the ornamentation being in very high relief, and consisting frequently of models of fish, reptiles, shells, or leaves. Bernard Palissy, a French potter of the fifteenth century, was the designer of this ware, and the art of manufacturing it died with him, all attempts to imitate it having failed.

Paliurus (pā-i-ū'rus), n. [L. from Gr. paliouros, Christ's thorn.] A genus of deciduous shrubs, natives of the south of Europe and Asia Minor, and belonging to the nat. order Rhamnaceae. The P. palustris is a small thorny shrub with small shining ovate leaves and yellowish-green clustered flowers. It is common in the south-east of Europe and Asia Minor, and is supposed to have been the plant from which the Jews platted the crown of thorns for our Saviour; hence it has received the name of Christ's thorn.

Palkee (pal'kē), n. [Hind.] A palanquin.

Pall (pal), n. [A Sax. pell, from L. pallium, a pall.] 1. An outer garment; a cloak; a mantle. 'His lion's skin changed to a pall of gold.' Spenser.—2. A woollen mantle which the Roman emperors were accustomed, from the fourth century, to send to the patriarchs and primates of the Empire, and which was worn as a mark of ecclesiastical dignity.—3. Eccles. a mantle worn as an ensign of jurisdiction by the sovereign pontiff, and granted by him on their accession to patriarchs, primates, and metropolitans, and sometimes, as a mark of honour, to bishops. It is now a band made of white lamb's wool passing round the shoulders and having a strip falling down before and behind.—4. A cloth, often black, thrown over a coffin at a funeral; sometimes, also, over a tomb. 'Truth came borne with bier and pall.' Tennyson.—5. † The name given to fine cloth used for the robes of nobles. 'He gave her gold and purple pall to wear.' Spenser.—6. In her. a figure like the letter Y. It is formed by half a pale issuing from the base, and conjoined, in the fess point, with half a saltire from the dexter and sinister chief.

Pall (pal), v.t. To cover with a pall; to cover or invest; to shroud. 'The barge, pall'd all its length in blackest samite.' Tennyson.
Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell. Shak.

Pall (pal), v.t. [W. pallu, to fail; pall, loss of energy, failure.] To become vapid; to lose strength, life, spirit, or taste; to become insipid; as, the liquor palls.

Beauty soon grows familiar to the lover,
Fades in the eye and palls upon the sense. Addison.

Pall (pal), v.t. 1. To make vapid or insipid.
Reason and reflection . . . blunt the edge of his keenest desires, and pall all his enjoyments.

2. To cloy; as, the palled appetite.—3. To make spiritless; to dispirit; to depress.
Base, barbarous man, the more we raise our love,
The more we pall and cool and kill his ardour. Dryden.

4. To weaken; to impair. 'Thy palled fortunes.' Shak.

Pall† (pal), n. Nausea or nauseating.

The palls, or nauseatings . . . are of the worst and most hateful kinds of sensations. Shaftesbury.

Pall (pal), n. Same as Pavil.

Palla (pal'la), n. In Rom. antig. a large upper robe worn by ladies.

Palladian (pal-lā'di-an), a. Pertaining to Andrea Palladio, a celebrated Italian architect (1518-80).—Palladian architecture, a species of Italian architecture founded upon the Roman antique as interpreted by the writings of Vitruvius, but rather upon the Coliseum, baths, triumphal arches, and other secular buildings of the Romans than upon their temples. It is consequently more applicable to palaces and civic buildings than to churches. Although Palladian architecture is characterized by a strict use of the Roman orders, these are employed rather as a decorative than a constructive feature, and applied without regard to classic precedent.

Palladium, n. See PALLADIUM. Chaucer.

Palladium (pal-lā'di-um), n. [Gr. palladion, a sacred statue or image, from Pallas, the goddess.] 1. A statue or image of the goddess Pallas, on the preservation of which was said to have depended the safety of Troy. Hence—

2. Something that affords effectual defence, protection, and safety; as, trial by jury is the palladium of our civil rights.—3. A metal discovered in 1803 by Wollaston, and found in very small grains, of a steel gray colour and fibrous structure, in auriferous and platiniferous sand. It is infusible by ordinary heat, and, when native, is alloyed with a little platinum and iridium. It is ductile as well as malleable, and is considerably harder than platinum. Its specific gravity varies from 11.3 to 11.8. In fusibility it is intermediate between gold and platinum. It is oxidized and dissolved by nitric acid, but its proper solvent is nitro-hydrochloric acid. Its oxide forms beautiful red-coloured salts, from which metallic palladium is precipitated by sulphate of protoxide of iron and by most of the metals. It forms alloys, most of which are brittle, with arsenic, iron, bismuth, lead, tin, copper, silver, platinum, and gold; the alloy with nickel is ductile. It has the symbol Pd, and the at. wt. 106.

Palladiumize (pal-lā'di-um-iz), v.t. To cover or coat with palladium. Art Journal.

Pallah (pal'la), n. A species of antelope (Apyceros melampus) found in South Africa. See ROOY-BOK.

Pallas (pal'las), n. [Gr.] 1. The goddess of Pallas.—Antique statue in Louvre.

wisdom among the Greeks, subsequently identified with the Roman Minerva. See MINERVA.—2. One of the many small planetoids revolving between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter; discovered by Dr. Olbers, at Bremen, March 28, 1802. On account of the minuteness of this planet, and the nebulous appearance by which it is surrounded, it is extremely difficult to arrive at any certain conclusion respecting its real magnitude. Its diameter has been estimated at 172 miles, and its period of revolution 4.61 years. Its light undergoes considerable variations, and its motion in its orbit is greatly disturbed by the powerful attraction of Jupiter.

Pall-bearer (pal'bar-ēr), n. One of the persons who attend the coffin at a funeral: so called from the pall or covering which they formerly carried.

Palet (pal'et), n. [Fr. palette, from L.L. paleta, dim. from L. pala, a spade or shovel.] 1. In painting, a palette (which see).—2. An oval or round wooden instrument used by potters, crucible-makers, &c., for forming, heating, and rounding their wares.—3. In gilding, an instrument to take up the gold leaves from the pillow, and to apply and extend them.—4. The pieces connected with the pendulum of a clock or balance of a watch, which receive the immediate impulse of the swing-wheel or balance-wheel. Palettes are of various forms and constructions, according to the kind of escapement employed.—5. A measure formerly used by surgeons, containing 3 ounces. Hakevill.

Pallet (pal'et), n. [From Fr. paille, straw; L. palea, chaff.] A small and poor or rude bed. 'Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee.' Shak.

Pallet (pal'et), n. [Dim. of pale, in her.] In her. a diminutive of the pale, and containing only one-half of it in breadth. See PALE.

Palletted (pal'et-ed), pp. In her. conjoined by a pallet; as, a chevron palletted.

Pall-holder (pal'hold-ēr), n. Same as Pall-bearer.

Pallial (pal'i-al), a. Pertaining to a mantle, especially the mantle of molluscs.—Pallial impression, the mark formed in a bivalve shell by the pallium or mantle.—Pallial shell, a shell which is secreted by or contained within the mantle, such as the bone of the cuttle-fish.

Palliant† (pal'i-a-ment), n. [L. pallium, a cloak.] A dress; a robe. 'This palliant of white and spotless hue.' Shak.

Palliard† (pal'i-ard), n. [Fr. paillard, from paille, straw.] A vagabond who lies upon straw; a lecher; a lewd person.

Palliaridise (pal'i-ard-iz), n. Fornication. Sir G. Buck.

Palliasse (pal'i-as), n. Same as Paillassse.

Palliate (pal'i-āt), v.t. pret. & pp. palliated; ppr. palliating. [Fr. pallier, to cloak, palliate; from L. pallium, a cloak.] 1. † To cover as with a cloak; to clothe. 'Being palliated with a pilgrim's coat and hypocritical sanctity.' Sir T. Herbert.—2. To cover with excuse; to conceal the enormity of by excuses and apologies; to extenuate; to lessen; to soften or tone down by favourable representations; as, to palliate faults, offences, crimes, or vices.

The atrocious crime of being a young man . . . I shall neither attempt to palliate nor deny. Chatham.

3. To reduce in violence; to mitigate; to lessen or abate; as, to palliate a disease.

Palliate† (pal'i-āt), a. Eased; mitigated.

Bp. Fell.

Palliation (pal-i-ā'shon), n. 1. The act of palliating; concealment of the most flagrant circumstances of an offence; extenuation by favourable representation; as, the palliation of faults, offences, vices, or crimes.—2. Mitigation; alleviation; abatement, as of a disease.

If the just cure of a disease be full of peril, let the physician resort to palliation. Bacon.

Palliative (pal'i-āt-iv), a. [Fr. palliatif. See PALLIATE.] 1. Extenuating; serving to extenuate by excuses or favourable representation.—2. Mitigating; alleviating, as pain or disease.

Consumption pulmonary seldom admits of other than a palliative cure. Arbutnot.

Palliative (pal'i-āt-iv), n. 1. That which extenuates; as, a palliative of one's guilt.—

2. That which mitigates, alleviates, or abates the violence of pain, disease, or other evil. 'Those palliatives which weak, perfidious, or object politicians administer.' Swift.

Palliatory (pal'i-ät-o-ri), a. Palliative. Gent. Mag.

Pallid (pal'id), a. [L. pallidus, from pallio, to become pale. See PALE.] Pale; wan; deficient in colour; not high coloured; as, a pallid countenance. 'The violet pallid blue.' Spenser.

Pallidity (pal'id-i-ti), n. Quality of being pallid; paleness; pallidness.

Pallidly (pal'id-li), adv. With pallidity; palely; wanly. 'Pallidly sad, as if they were going to their graves.' Jer. Taylor.

Pallidness (pal'id-nes), n. Pallidity; paleness; wanness. Feltham.

Palliobranchiata (pal'i-lö-brang-ki-ä'ta), n. [L. pallium, a mantle, and branchia, gills.] In zool. an old name for the Brachiopoda, founded upon the belief that the system of tubes in the mantle constituted the gills.

Pallium (pal'i-li-um), n. [L.] 1. In anc. costume, a large square woollen cloak worn by the Greeks, enveloping the whole person, and corresponding to the toga of the Romans. 2. An ecclesiastical pall.—3. The mantle of a bivalve mollusc.

Pallmall (pel-me'), n. [O. Fr. palemail; It. pallamaglio, from palla, a ball, and maglio, L. malleus, a mallet, a hammer.] An ancient game in which a round box ball was with a mallet or club struck through a ring elevated upon a pole, standing at either end of an alley, the person who could do so with fewest blows, or with a number agreed on, being the winner. The name was also given to the mallet itself, and to the alley or walk where the game was played. The game was formerly practised in St. James's Park, London, and gave its name to the street called Pall Mall.

Pallor (pal'or), n. [L.] Paleness. 'Lamia in her first moon-lighted pallor.' E. B. Browning.

Palm (päm), n. [L. palma, the palm of the hand, a palm-tree; Gr. palame, the palm of the hand; cog. A. Sax. folm, the hand; O. H. G. folma, the flat of the hand.] 1. The inner part of the hand.

You yourself
Are much condemned to have an itching palm.
Shak.

2. A lineal measure equal either to the breadth of the hand or to its length from the wrist to the tips of the fingers; a measure of length equal to 3 and in some instances 4 inches; among the Romans, a lineal measure equal to about 8½ inches, corresponding to the length of the hand.—3. The broad triangular part of an anchor at the end of the arms.—4. Naut. an instrument used in sewing canvas instead of a thimble, consisting of a piece of leather that goes round the hand, with a piece of iron sewn on it so as to rest in the palm.—5. The name given to the broad part at the top of the buck's horn.—6. The name of any of the plants of the monocotyledonous order Palmeæ (which see).—7. A branch or leaf of the palm-tree, anciently borne or worn as a symbol of victory or triumph; hence, superiority; victory; triumph. 'The palm was adopted as an emblem of victory, it is said, because the tree is so elastic as, when pressed, to rise and recover its correct position.

It doth amaze me
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone. Shak.

Namur subdued is England's palm alone. Dryden.

8. A popular name for the bloom of the Salix caprea or great willow.

In colour like the satin-shining palm
On fallows in the windy gleams of March.
Tennyson.

Palm (päm), v.t. pret. and pp. palm'd; ppr. palming. 1. To conceal in the palm of the hand, as jugglers or cheaters.

They palm'd the trick that lost the game. Prior.

2. To impose by fraud: generally followed by upon before the person and off before the object; as, to palm off trash upon the public. 'For you may palm upon us new for old.' Dryden.—3. To handle. Prior.—4. To stroke with the hand.

Palmeæ (pal-mä'së-ë), n. pl. [L. palma, the palm of the hand, a palm-tree—from its leaves spreading like the palm of the hand.] The palms, a nat. order of arborescent endogens, chiefly inhabiting the tropics, distinguished by their fleshy, colourless, six-parted flowers, inclosed within spathes; their minute embryo lying in the midst of albumen, and remote from the hilum; and their arborescent stems with rigid, plaited, or pinnated articulated leaves, sometimes called fronds. The palms are among the most interesting races of plants in the vegetable kingdom, from their beauty, variety, and associations, as well as from their great value to mankind as affording food, raiment, and numerous objects of economical importance. While some, as Kunthia montana, Oreodoxa frigida, have trunks as slender as the reed, or longer than the longest cable (Calamus rudentum being 500 feet), others, as Jubæa spectabilis and Cocos butyracea, are 3 and even 5 feet thick; while some are of low growth, as Attalea amygdalina, others exhibit a stem towering from 160 to 180 feet high, as Ceroxylon andicola or wax-palm of South America. Also, while they generally have a cylindrical undivided stem, Hyphæne thebaica (the doum palm of Upper Egypt) and Hyphæne coriacea are remarkable for their repeatedly divided trunk. About 600 species are known, but it is probable that many are still undescribed. Wine, oil, wax, flour, sugar, salt, are the produce of palms; to which may be added thread, dyes, weapons, food, and habitations. There is scarcely a single species in which some useful property is not found. The cocoa-nut, the date, and others are valued for their fruit; the cabbage-palm, for its edible terminal buds; the fan-palm, and many more, are valued for their foliage, whose hardness and durability render it an excellent material for thatching; the sweet juice of the Palmyra and others, when fermented, yields wine; the centre of the sago-palm abounds in nutritive starch; the trunk of the Ceroxylon exudes a valuable wax; oil is expressed in abundance from the oil-palm; an astringent matter resembling dragon's blood is produced by Calamus Draco; many of the species contain so hard a kind of fibrous matter that it is used instead of needles, or so tough that it is manufactured into cordage; and, finally, their trunks are, in some cases, valued for their strength, and used as timber, or for their elasticity or flexibility, as in the cane-palm. Descriptions and illustrations of many of the palms will be found in separate articles scattered through this book.

Palmeaceæ (pal-mä'shus), a. Belonging to the Palmeæ or palm tribe.

Palma Christi (pal'ma kris'ti), n. [L.] A name frequently applied to the castor-oil plant, or Ricinus communis. See RICINUS.

Palmacite (pal'ma-sit), n. [L. palma, a palm.] A general term for any fossil vegetable remains—whether stem, fruit, or leaf—presenting some resemblance to the present palms. In a more restricted sense, a simple, cylindrical stem, covered by the bases of fallen, petiolate leaves. Palmacites occur in the coal-measures and later strata. Page.

Palmar (pal'mër), a. [L. palmaris, from palma, the palm of the hand.] Pertaining to the palm or interior surface of the hand; of the breadth of the hand.—Palmar arch, in anat. one of the two curved extremities of the radial and ulnar arteries in the human palm: the radial artery forms an arch in the palm of the hand, called the deep palmar arch, and the ulnar artery one called the superficial palmar arch.—Long palmar muscle and great palmar muscle, two muscles of the palm which both act in bending the hand.—Short palmar muscle, a muscle which contracts the skin of the palm.

Palmary (pal'ma-ri), a. [L. palmaris. See PALMAR.] 1. Pertaining to a palm.—2. Worthy of receiving the palm; pre-eminent; chief. 'His palmary and capital work.' Bp. Horne.

Palmata (pal-mä'ta), n. [L. palma, the palm.] In the R. Cath. Ch. a penance which consisted in striking the hand on the ground. Rev. Orby Shipley.

Palmate Tubers of Orchis maculata.

Palmate, Palmated (pal'mät, pal'mät-ed), a. [L. palmatus, from palma, palm.] 1. Having the shape of the hand; resembling a hand with the fingers spread; as, palmated leaves or tubers.—2. Having the toes webbed; having webs between the toes; as, the palmated feet of aquatic fowls.

Palmately (pal'mät-i), adv. In a palmate manner.

Palmatifid (pal'mät-i-fid), a. [L. palmatus, palmate, and findo, fido, to split or cleave.] In bot. divided so as to resemble a hand; as, palmatifid leaves or tubers.

Palmatiform, Palmiform (pal'mät-i-form, pal'mi-form), a. In bot. a term applied to a leaf whose ribs are arranged in a palmate form, radiating from the top of the petiole.

Palmatilobate (pal'mät-i-lö'bät), a. In bot. palmate with the lobes divided to an uncertain depth.

Palmatipartite (pal'mät-i-par'tit), a. [Palmate and partite.] In bot. a term applied to a palmate leaf in which the lobes are divided beyond the middle, and the parenchyma is not interrupted.

Palmatisected (pal'mät-i-sek'ted), a. [Palmate, and L. sectus, cut.] In bot. a term applied to a palmate leaf, in which the lobes are divided down to the midrib, and the parenchyma is interrupted.

Palm-bird (päm'bërd), n. A beautiful bird of West Africa, with bright orange and black plumage; named from building its nest in palm-trees.

Palm-butter (päm'büt-tër), n. The same as Palm-oil.

Palm-cat (päm'kat), n. An animal of the genus Paradoxurus, the P. typus or common paradoxure, of the family Viverridæ (civets and genetæ). It is common in India, and is often brought to this country. It can curl its tail into a tight spiral. It is an excellent climber, and feeds upon palm fruits, &c.

Palm-colour (päm'kul-ër), n. A colour resembling that of the palm; bay-colour.

Palm'd (päm'd), a. Wearing or possessing palms.—Palm'd deer, a stag of full growth that bears the palms of his horns aloft.

The proud, palm'd deer
Forsake the closer woods. Drayton.

Palmellæ, Palmellaceæ (pal-mel'lë-ë, pal-mel-lä'së-ë), n. pl. A nat. order of green-spored algae, among the lowest of plants, including red snow (Protococcus nivalis), gory dew (Palmella cruenta), &c. They all grow on damp surfaces, and propagate with great rapidity by gemmation and otherwise. The young plants present wonderful power of locomotion by means of vibratile cilia. This power has led to their being mistaken for animals.

Palmer (päm'ër), n. 1. A pilgrim who carried in his hand a staff of palm-tree, or one that returned from the Holy Land bearing branches of palm; a pilgrim or crusader. He was distinguished from other pilgrims by being a constant traveller to holy places, and by living on alms as he travelled, under a vow of poverty.—2. A cane or ferula.

Palmer (päm'ër), n. One who palms or cheats, as at cards or dice.

Palmer-worm (päm'ër-wërm), n. The common name for all the hairy caterpillars, but particularly of the tiger-moth (Arctia caja): supposed to be so called because it wanders, as it were, like a palmer, and devours leaves and herbage. Joel i. 4.

Palmettes (pal'mets), n. [Fr.] In arch. small ornaments resembling palm-leaves carved on some Roman mouldings.

Palmetto (pal-met'tō), n. [Sp. palmito, the palmetto, dim. from L. palma, a palm.] A common name of several palms, especially of Sabal Palmetto, the cabbage palmetto, growing in the West Indies and in the southern states of North America, producing useful timber, and leaves that are made into hats, mats, &c. The name is also given to Chamaecyparis humilis, the small palm of Southern Europe.

Palm-honey (pām'hun-i), n. The inspissated and very sweet juice of a species of palm growing in Chili. See COQUITO.

Palm-house (pām'hous), n. A glass house for raising palms and other tropical plants.

Palmiferous (pal-mif'er-us), a. [L. palma, a palm-tree, and fero, to bear.] Bearing or producing palms.

Palmigrade (pal'mi-grād), a. [L. palma, the palm, and gradior, to walk.] A term applied to animals that walk on the sole of the foot, and not merely on the toes; plantigrade.

Palmiped (pal'mi-ped), a. [L. palma, the palm of the hand, and pes, pedis, a foot.] Web-footed; having the toes connected by a membrane, as a water-fowl.

Palmiped (pal'mi-ped), n. pl. Palmipeds, Palmipedes (pal'mi-pedz, pal-mip'e-dez), a. A bird that has webbed feet, or the toes connected by a membrane. The Palmipeds form the sixth order of birds in Cuvier's arrangement, corresponding to the Natatores, or swimming birds, of other naturalists. The goose and duck are familiar examples. See NATATORES.

Palmister (pal'mis-ter), n. One who deals in palmistry, or pretends to tell fortunes by the palm of the hand.

Some vain palmisters have gone so far as to take upon them, by the sight of the hand, to judge of fortunes. Ep. Hall.

Palmistry (pal'mis-tri), n. [From L. palma, the palm of the hand.] 1. The art or practice of divining or telling fortunes by the lines and marks in the palm of the hand; a species of imposition much practised by gypsies; also, the art of judging character from the shape of the hand. Sir T. Browne. 2. Manual dexterity. [Humorous.]

He found his pocket was picked; that being a kind of palmistry at which this race of vermin are very dexterous. Addison.

Palmitic (pal-mit'ik), a. Pertaining to or obtained from palm-oil. — Palmitic acid (C₁₆H₃₂O₂), an acid discovered by Frey in palm-oil. In appearance it resembles margaric acid, forming pearly scales. With chlorine it forms a variety of acid oils.

Palmitin, Palmatine (pal'mi-tin), n. C₁₆H₃₂(C₁₆H₃₁O₂)₂. The principal solid ingredient of palm-oil, a solid colourless crystalline substance, melting at about 45° C.

Palm-kale (pām'kal), n. A variety of the cabbage extensively cultivated in the Channel Islands. It grows to the height of 10 or 12 feet, and has much the aspect of a palm.

Palm-oil (pām'oil), n. A fatty substance obtained from several species of palms, but chiefly from the fruit of the oil-palm, or Elæis guineensis, and imported from the west coast of Africa. In cold countries it acquires the consistency of butter, and is of an orange-yellow colour. It is employed in the manufacture of soap and candles, for lubricating machinery, wheels of railway carriages, &c. By the natives of the Palm-oil Tree (Elæis guineensis).

Gold Coast this oil is used as butter; and when eaten fresh is a wholesome and delicate article of diet. Called also Palm-butter.

Palm-sugar (pām'shū-gér), n. Saccharine matter yielded by the juice of various kinds of palms, from which cane-sugar may be extracted; jaggery.

Palm-Sunday (pām'sun-dā), n. The Sunday next before Easter; so called in commemoration of our Saviour's triumphal entry into Jerusalem, when the multitude strewed palm branches in the way.

Palm-tree (pām'trē), n. A popular name for many species of the Palmaceæ (which see).

Palm-wine (pām'win), n. A species of wine obtained by fermenting the juice of the flowers and stems of the cocoa-nut palm, the Palmyra-palm, the oil-palm, and other palms.

Palm-worm (pām'wérn), n. A species of centiped found in America. It is about 12 inches long, and inflicts painful wounds.

Palm (pām'), a. 1. Bearing or abounding in palms. 'Palmly hillock' Milton. 'The palmly land.' Dryden. — 2. Worthy of the palm; flourishing; prosperous. 'In the most high and palmly state of Rome.' Shak.

Palmyra, Palmyra-palm (pal-mī'ra, pal-mī'ra-pām), n. A name given to Borassus flabelliformis, the most common palm of India, the wood of which, in old trees, is very hard, black, heavy, durable, susceptible of a high polish, and valuable. It grows to the height of 40 or even 60 feet; the leaves are about 4 feet long, with stalks of the same length. They are employed in making fans and punkahs, and also in thatching; the fruit is eaten; the sap is drunk in its natural state, and forms a refreshing beverage, or is evaporated to make jaggery or coarse sugar; when fermented it forms palm-wine. The young plants are cooked as green vegetables. Numbers of the inhabitants of Southern India and Northern Ceylon owe a great part of their subsistence to this palm.

Palmyra-wood (pal-mī'ra-wūd), n. A name given to the wood of the Palmyra-palm and other palms imported into this country.

Papaver (pa-pă'vēr), n. [L., a poppy.] A genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Papaveraceæ. This genus usually has two convex deciduous sepals, four petals, and numerous stamens; the capsule is obovate, one-celled, opening under the crown of the stigmas with short valves; the flowers are large and showy, usually red or white, but last only a short time. It consists of herbaceous plants abounding in milky juice. There are about fourteen species, chiefly found in Europe, North Africa, and Asia, but few of them are remarkable for any useful properties. P. Rhæas, the common red poppy, so familiar a plant in this country, yields the syrup of red poppies of the British Pharmacopœia. P. somniferum (the opium poppy) is common in gardens in Britain, and is probably a native of Asia Minor or of Central Asia. There are two distinct varieties, the red or violet flowered and black-seeded, and the white-flowered with white seeds, called by some P. officinale. This poppy is cultivated on the Continent and elsewhere on account of its seeds, which yield a bland oil much esteemed, and on account of the capsules, from which opium is obtained. On the latter account it is extensively cultivated in Turkey and Asia Minor, Egypt, Persia, and India. See OPIUM.

Papaveraceæ (pa-pă'vēr-ă'vēr-ē), n. pl. [From Papaver, one of the genera.] A nat. order of plants, belonging to the polypetalous division of the exogenous class. It contains about 160 species, mostly natives of the temperate region of the northern hemisphere. They are smooth herbs, rarely shrubs, with alternate often cut leaves, and solitary handsome flowers. See PAPAVER.

Papaveraceous (pa-pă'vēr-ă'shūs), a. Pertaining to the poppy or Papaveraceæ.

Papaw (pa-pă'), n. (Sp. and Pg. papaya, a name brought from Malabar.) 1. A tree indigenous to south America, of the genus Carica, the C. Papaya; also, its fruit. It is now widely cultivated in tropical countries, and was at one time supposed to be a native of the East Indies. It grows to the height of 18 or 20 feet, with a soft herbaceous stem, naked nearly to the top, where the leaves issue on every side on long footstalks. Between the leaves grow the flower and the fruit, which is of the size of a melon. The juice is acrid and milky, but the fruit when boiled is eaten with meat, like other vegetables. The juice of the unripe fruit is a most powerful and efficient vermifuge; the powder of the seed even answers the same purpose. The juice of the tree or its fruit, or an infusion of it, has the singular property of rendering the toughest meat tender, and this is even said to be effected by hanging the meat among the branches.—2. The papaw of North America is Asimina triloba, nat. order Anonaceæ; it produces a sweet edible fruit.

Papaw-tree (pa-pă'trē), n. See PAPAWE.

Papayaceæ (pa-pă-yă'vēr-ē), n. pl. [See PAPAWE.] A nat. order of exogenous plants, so named from Carica Papaya, the principal species. It consists of the genus Carica alone, and is remarkable for having monopetalous male flowers and polypetalous females, and for its simple unbranched stems, growing only by the gradual development of a terminal bud. See PAPAWE.

Paper (pă'pēr), n. [Fr. papier, It. papiro, from L. papyrus, Gr. papyros, an Egyptian reed, from the inner bark of which a kind of writing paper was anciently made in Egypt.] 1. A thin and flexible substance of various colours, but most commonly white, used for writing and printing on, and for various other purposes. It is manufactured principally of vegetable fibre reduced to a pulp by means of water and grinding. Rags form the staple and most desirable material for paper-making, but upwards of 400 different materials are in use for the same purpose. Paper is also extensively remade from old printed or written paper. Till the early part of the nineteenth century all paper was made by hand in moulds of various sizes. Of hand-made writing and drawing papers the largest size made—called 'antiquarian'—is $52\frac{1}{2} \times 30\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and through numerous sizes it passes to the smallest—called 'pott'— $15\frac{1}{2} \times 12\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Machine-made paper is, however, made in a continuous sheet, while its breadth is only limited by the breadth of the machine on which it is made. All important newspapers or other periodicals are now printed on webs several miles in length, the paper not being cut till after it is printed. The machine-making of paper has to a great extent rendered obsolete the old distinctions of size which prevailed when only hand moulds were used; machines for cutting the 'webs' of paper accurately to any size being in use. The principal varieties of ordinary paper are—writing and printing papers, coarse papers for wrapping and other purposes, and blotting and filtering papers; while some useful kinds are the result of manipulations subsequent to the paper-maker's work, as lithographic paper, copying paper, tracing paper, &c.—2. A piece, leaf, or sheet of paper.

'Tis as impossible to draw regular characters on a trembling mind, as on a shaking paper. Locke.

3. A single sheet appearing periodically; a newspaper; a journal.

To you all readers turn, and they can look Pleased in a paper, who abhor a book. Crabbe.

4. An essay or article on some subject; a dissertation on some special topic; as, a paper on monumental brasses.—5. Any written or printed document or instrument, whether note, receipt, bill, invoice, bond, memorial, deed, or the like.

They brought a paper to me to be signed. Dryden.

6. Negotiable evidences of indebtedness, such as promissory notes, bills of exchange, &c.; used collectively.

The bank discounted, and had gone on for years discounting, their paper. Pall Mall Gazette.

7. Hangings printed or stamped: paper for covering the walls of rooms.—8. Free passes to a place of entertainment; as, the manager gives any amount of paper; also, the persons admitted by the pass; as, the house was filled with paper.—Fossil paper, a variety of asbestos (which see).—Laid paper. See LAID.—Parchment paper, paper prepared from ordinary unsized paper by dipping it for a few seconds in a liquid consisting of one part of water and two parts of sulphuric acid or oil of vitriol at a temperature of 60° Fahr., then washing it in cold water, and removing the last traces of the acid by dipping it in a weak solution of ammonia. It is, like parchment, tough, translucent, highly polished, and almost impermeable to water. Called also Papyrin.—Tissue paper. See TISSUE.—Waste paper, used paper, fit only for re-manufacturing purposes.—Wove paper. See WOVE.

Paper (pă'pēr), a. 1. Made of paper; consisting of paper.—2. Appearing merely in certain written or printed statements without really existing; as, a paper army.—3. Thin; slight; frail.

There is but a thin paper wall between great discoveries and a perfect ignorance of them. Burnet.

It is usually prepared by pulping any kind or mixture of different kinds of paper into a mass of a doughy consistence, which is moulded into various forms, as tea-trays, snuff-boxes, &c.

Papilio (pa-pī'li-ō), n. [L., a butterfly.] A genus of lepidopterous insects, comprising numerous species of the diurnal tribes. The P. machaon is the swallow-tail butterfly, one of the most elegant and the largest of our indigenous species; the female frequently measuring upwards of 3 inches in expanse of wing. The general colour of the wing is black, relieved by bold yellow markings. From the posterior margin of the wings an acute 'tail' projects, which has been fancifully compared to the outer tail-feathers of the swallow—hence the name. This butterfly is very rare in the northern countries.

Papilionaceæ (pa-pī'li-ō-nā'sē-ō), n. pl. [L. papilio, a butterfly.] A name given to the principal sub-order of leguminous plants, from the fancied resemblance of the expanded superior petals to the wings of a butterfly. The garden pea offers a familiar example of this structure. See LEGUMINOSÆ.

Papilionaceous (pa-pī'li-ō-nā'shūs), a. 1. Resembling the butterfly.—2. In bot. having the corolla shaped like a butterfly, such as that of the pea. A papilionaceous flower consists of a large upper petal, called the standard or vexillum s, two lateral petals called alæ or wings w, and two intermediate petals forming a carina or keel k.

Papilionaceous Blossom.

Papilionidæ (pa-pī'li-on'ī-dē), n. pl. A family of lepidopterous insects, of which the genus Papilio is the type. It comprehends the diurnal butterflies, and answers to the group Diurna of the large-winged butterflies.

A small pap or nipple; specifically, a nipple of the breast; also, one of the small eminences, more or less prominent, at the surface of several parts, as the tongue, formed by the ultimate expansion of the vessels and nerves.—2. In bot. a small elongated protuberance; a nipple-shaped projection.

Papillary (pā-pī'la-ri), a. Pertaining to the papilla or nipple; resembling the nipple; covered with papillæ; papillose.—Papillary glands, in bot. a species of glands resembling the papillæ of the tongue. They occur in many of the Labiata.

Papillate (pā-pī'lāt), v. i. pret. papillated; ppr. papillating. To grow into a nipple or assume a similar form.

Papillate (pā-pī'lāt), a. Covered with soft tubercles or papillæ.

Papillate (pā-pī'lāt), v. t. To form or cover with papillæ or nipple-like protuberances. 'Something covered by numerous small prominences, as the papillated surface of an ordinary counterpane.' H. Spencer.

Papilliform (pa-pī'li-form), a. [L. papilla, a nipple, and forma, shape.] Shaped like a nipple; as, a papilliform matrix.

Papillose (pā-pī'lōs), a. Same as Papillary.

Papillote (pā-pī'lōt), n. [Fr.] A small piece of paper on which ladies roll up their hair; a curl-paper.

O Lion, you that made a noise,
And shook a mane in papillotes. Tennyson.

Papillos (pa-pī'lūs), a. Papillary.

Papion (pā-pi-on), n. [Mod. L. papio, from Fr. babouin, a baboon.] Cynocephalus Sphinx, a species of the dog-headed baboons, akin to the mandril, to which great reverence was paid in ancient Egypt. Selected individuals were kept near the temples and liberally fed. Many mummified forms of these baboons have been found in the temple caves of Egypt.

Papish† (pā'pish), n. A papist. 'And they say he's a papish, too, forsooth.' Cowley.

Papism† (pā'pizm), n. [From Fr. pape, pope.] Popery. Bp. Bedell.

Papist (pā'pist), n. [Fr. papiste; from Fr. pape, L. papa, pope.] A Roman Catholic; one that adheres to the Church of Rome: used contemptuously.

Papistic, Papistical (pā-pis'tik, pā-pis'tik-al), a. Popish: pertaining to popery; adherent to the Church of Rome and its doctrines and ceremonies: used contemptuously.

Papistically (pā-pis'tik-al-ly), adv. In a papistical manner.

Papistry (pā'pist-ri), n. Popery; the doctrines and ceremonies of the Church of Rome: used contemptuously.

Papized† (pā'pizd), a. Conformed to Popery. Fuller.

Papoose, Pappoose (pā-pōs, pap-pōs'), n. Among the native Indians of North America, a babe or young child.

Pappea (pā'pē-a), n. A genus of Sapindaceæ, the only species of which is P. capensis, a small tree about 20 feet high, a native of the Cape of Good Hope. A vinous beverage and excellent vinegar are prepared from its fruit, and an eatable though slightly purgative oil is extracted from the seeds. Its trunk affords a handsome wood, used for making small articles of furniture, &c.

Pappose, Pappous (pap'ōs, pap'ūs), a. [From L. pappus, Gr. pappos, down.] Downy; furnished with a pappus, as the seeds of certain plants, such as thistles, dandelions, &c.

Pappus (pap'ūs), n. [L., from Gr. pappos, an old man or grandfather, hence a substance resembling gray hairs.] In bot. the feathery appendage that crowns many single-seeded seed-vessels; a particular form of calyx in composite plants, which exists in the form of a rudimentary cap, or membranous corinet, or of slender hairs, or in some other similar condition. The down of the dandelion is a familiar instance of pappus in a state of beautiful division resembling fine feathers.

Pappy (pap'i), a. Like pap; soft; succulent. 'Tender and pappy flesh.' Burnet.

Papuan (pā'pū-an), n. and a. One of or pertaining to a race of a dark brown colour, inhabiting the Indian Archipelago, so called from the Island of Papua or New Guinea.

Papula (pā'pū-la), n. pl. Papulæ (pā'pū-lē), [L.] A pimple; a small elevation of the cuticle not containing a fluid nor suppurating, commonly terminating in scurf.

Papular, Papulose (pā'pū-ler, pā'pū-lōs), a. Of or belonging to, resembling, or covered with papule or pimples.

Papulous (pā'pū-lus), a. Same as Papular.

Papyraceous, Papyrean (pā-pī-rā'shūs, pā-pī-rē-an), a. Belonging to the papyrus or to pappi; made of or resembling papyrus or paper.

Papyrine (pā'pī-rin), n. See Parchment Paper under PAPER.

Papyrus (pā-pī'rus), n. [See PAPER.] 1. A cyperaceous plant, the Papyrus antiquorum, found in the south of Italy and elsewhere, but especially in the valley of the Nile, the soft flower-stems of which afforded the most ancient material for writing upon. Another species, P. corymbosus, or P. Pargorei, is much used in India for making mats. 2. One of the written scrolls made of the papyrus found in various places, but more especially in Egypt.

Egyptian Papyrus (Papyrus antiquorum).

Par (pār), n. [L. par, equal, whence pair and peer.] State of equality; equality in circumstances or in value.—Par, in com. is the state of the shares of a public undertaking when they are neither at a discount nor a premium—that is, when they may be purchased at the original price, or at par.—Above par, at a premium.—Below par, at a discount.—Par of exchange, the established value of the coin or standard value of one country expressed in the coin or standard value of another.

Par (pār), n. Same as Parr.

Para, A Greek preposition used as a prefix in words of Greek origin, and signifying position close to, near, side by side, and hence correspondence of parts, as in parallel, parable, &c.; also, out of, beyond, or on the other side, &c.

Para (pārā), n. [Turk., from Per. pārah or pāreh, a piece.] The name of a small Turkish coin; it is the fortieth part of a piastre, and varies much in value, owing to the debased and complicated condition of the Turkish coinage. It is equal to about $\frac{1}{4}$ d. sterling in Turkey, and $\frac{1}{4}$ d. sterling in Egypt.

Parable† (pārā-bl), a. [L. parabilis, from paro, paratum, to prepare, provide.] Capable of being procured.

They were not well-wishers unto parable physick, remedies easily acquired, who derived medicines from the phenix. Sir T. Browne.

Parable (parā-bl), n. [Fr. parabole, from L. parabola, from Gr. parabolē, from para, beside, and ballo, to throw.] Originally, a comparison or similitude; now, specifically, a fable or allegorical relation or representation of something real in life or nature, from which a moral is drawn for instruction. It is a species of fable, and differs from the apologue by narrating events which, though fictitious, might have happened in nature. The word is also employed in Scripture to signify a proverb, a proverbial or notable saying, a thing darkly or figuratively expressed, a visible type or emblem.

Shall not all these take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeth himself with thick clay! Hab. ii. 6.

I will open my mouth in a parable; I will utter dark sayings of old. Ps. lxxviii. 2.

Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God; but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables. Mark iv. 11.

And his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares. Mat. xiii. 36.

Parable (parā-bl), v. t. pret. & pp. parabled; ppr. parableing. To represent by a parable.

That was chiefly meant, which by the ancient sages was thus parabled. Milton.

Parabola (pa-rāb'ō-la), n. [Gr. parabolē, so called from its axis being parallel to the side of the cone. See PARABOLIC.] A conic section arising from cutting a cone by a plane parallel to one of its sides, described on a plane surface as follows:—In the accompanying figure let the straight line BH, and the point F without it, be given in position; then if, in the same plane with BH and F, any point P so move that PG, its perpendicular distance from the given line, is always equal to PF, its distance from the given point, the line PAD described by the moving point is a parabola. The given line BH is called the directrix, and the given point F, the focus. The line FAC, drawn through the focus, perpendicular to BH, is called the axis, or principal diameter, and any line DR, parallel to it is called a diameter. The parabola is the curve in which a cannon ball or other projectile would move, were it not for the resistance of the air; and hence the connection of the parabola with the general theory of projectiles.

Parabole (pa-rāb'ō-lē), n. [See PARABOLIC.] In rhet. similitude; comparison.

Parabolic (pa-ra-bol'ik), a. 1. Having the form or outline of a parabola; pertaining to or resembling a parabola; as, a parabolic curve; a parabolic conoid.—Parabolic conoid, the solid generated by the rotation of the parabola about its axis.—Parabolic curve, an algebraic curve, of which the equation is of the form of $y = a + bx + cx^2 + dx^3 + \dots$. Curves of this kind are frequently employed for the purpose of representing a number of observations, or for approximating to the areas of other curves.—Parabolic spindle, a solid generated by the rotation of the portion of a parabola cut off by a double ordinate about such ordinate.—Parabolic spiral or helioid. See HELICOID.—2. Pertaining to a parable; *paraboli*cal.

Parabolical (pa-ra-bol'ik-al), a. Parabolic; of the nature of a parabola; having the character of a parabola. 'A parabolical description.' South.

Parabolically (pa-ra-bol'ik-al-li), adv. 1. By way of parabola.

These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no liberal inference. Sir T. Browne.

2. In the form of a parabola.

Paraboliform (pa-ra-bol'ik-form), a. Having the form of a parabola. 'A paraboliform curve.' Harris.

Parabolist (pa-rab'ol-ist), n. A writer or narrator of parables. Boothroyd.

Paraboloid (pa-rab'ol-oid), n. [Parabola, and Gr. eidos, likeness.] The solid generated by the revolution of a parabola about its axis; a parabolic conoid.

Paraboloidal (pa-ra-bo'loid'al), a. Pertaining to or resembling a paraboloid.

Paracelsian (pa-ra-sel'si-an), n. A physician who follows the practice of Paracelsus, a Swiss physician of celebrity who lived at the close of the fifteenth century.

Paracelsian (pa-ra-sel'si-an), a. Denoting the medical practice of Paracelsus.

Paracelsist (pa-ra-sel'sist), n. A Paracelsian.

Paracentesis (pa'a-sen-tē'sis), n. [Gr. parakentēsis—para, through, and kentēō, to pierce.] In surg. the perforation of a cavity of the body either with a trocar, lancet, or other suitable instrument, for the evacuation of any effused fluid; the operation of tapping, as for ovarian dropsy. Dunghison.

Paracentric, Paracentral (pa-a-sen'trik, pa-a-sen'trik-al), a. [Gr. para, beyond, and kentron, centre.] Deviating from circularity; going out of the strict curve which would form a circle.—Paracentric curve, or paracentric, in geom. a curve having this property, that a body descending along it by the force of gravity will approach to, or recede from, a centre or fixed point by equal distances in equal times.—Paracentric motion or velocity, in astron. the rate at which a planet approaches nearer to, or recedes farther from, the sun or centre of attraction in a given interval without reference to its motion in space, or to its motion reckoned in any other direction.

Paracentric (pa-a-sen'trik), n. Same as Paracentric Curve. See the adjective.

Parachronism (pa-rak'ron-izm), n. [Gr. para, beyond, and chronos, time.] An error in chronology by which an event is placed later than it should be.

Parachrose (pa'a-kros), a. [Gr. parachrosēsis, false colouring—para, beside, beyond, and chrōsis, a colouring.] In mineral, changing colour by exposure to the weather.

Parachute (pa'a-shūt), n. [Fr. from parer, to ward off, and chute, a fall.] In ballooning, an apparatus to prevent rapidity of descent.

Parachute (Garnerin's Parachute descending).

It is usually of an umbrella shape, 20 or 30 feet in diameter, and is attached to a balloon for the purpose of enabling an aeronaut, in case of danger, to drop from his balloon to the ground without sustaining injury. This is effected by means of the resistance of the air, which causes the parachute to expand and thus diminishes the velocity of descent. While the balloon is ascending the parachute is like a closed umbrella.

Paraclete (pa'a-klēt), n. [Gr. paraklētos, from parakaleō—para, to, and kaleō, to call.] An advocate; one called to aid or support; hence, the Consoler, Comforter, or Intercessor, a term applied to the Holy Spirit.

Paraclose (pa'a-klōs), n. See PARCLOSE.

Paracmasic (par-ak-mas'tik), a. [Gr. para, beyond, and akmē, the highest point.] In med. gradually decreasing, as a distemper. Dunghison.

Paracresol (pa-a-kre'sol), n. See CRESOL.
Paracrostic (pa-a-kros'tik), n. [Gr. para, beside, and akrostichos, acrostic.] A poetical composition in which the first verse contains, in order, all the letters which commence the remaining verses of the poem or division.

Paracyanogen (pa'a-si-an'ō-jen), n. [Prefix para, beside, and cyanogen.] A substance formed by heating to redness the brown precipitate formed by the decomposition of cyanogen with water or ammonia. It is a dark brown powder. See CYANOGEN.

Parade (pa-rād'), n. [Fr. parade, show, display, a military parade, &c., from Sp. parada, a parade, a place for the exercise of troops, from L. para, paratus, to set or place in order, to prepare.] 1. Show; ostentation; display.

Be rich, but of your wealth make no parade. Swift.
Nor lacked . . .
Our table small parade of garden fruits,
And whortle-berries from the mountain-side. Wordsworth.

2. That which is displayed or disposed for display; a show; a pompous procession.
The rites performed, the parson paid,
In state return'd the grand parade. Swift.

3. Military display; the assembly and orderly arrangement of troops for show, inspection, or the like.
The cherubim . . . stood armed
To their night-watches in warlike parade. Milton.

4. The place where such display or assembly is held.—5. A public walk.—6. Posture of defence; guard. 'When they are not in parade, and upon their guard.' Locke. [A French idiom.]

Parade (pa-rād'), v.t. pret. & pp. paraded; ppr. parading. 1. To exhibit in a showy or ostentatious manner; to make a parade, display, or show of.

There is a superfluity of erudition in his novels that verges upon pedantry, because it is sometimes paraded with an appearance of ostentation, and is introduced in season and out of season. Edin. Rev.

2. To assemble and array or marshal in military order; as, the troops were paraded at the usual hour.

Parade (pa-rād'), v.i. 1. To assemble and be marshalled in military order; to go about in military procession.—2. To walk about for show; to walk to and fro in some public place.

Paradigm (pa'a-dim), n. [Gr. paradeigma—para, and deigma, example, from deiknumi, to show.] 1. An example; a model. 'The paradigms and patterns of all things.' Cudworth.—2. In gram. an example of a word, as a noun, adjective, or verb, in its various inflections.—3. In rhet. a general term, used by Greek writers in the sense of example or illustration, of which parable and fable are species.

Paradigmatic, Paradigmati-cal (pa'a-dig-mat'ik, pa'a-dig-mat'ik-al), a. Exemplary. 'Those virtues . . . are paradigmatical.' Dr. H. More.

Paradigmatic (pa'a-dig-mat'ik), n. In theol. a name formerly given to a writer who narrated the lives of religious persons, by way of examples of Christian holiness.

Paradigmati-cally (pa'a-dig-mat'ik-al-li), adv. In the way of example.

Paradigmatize (pa-a-dig-ma-tiz), v.t. To set forth as a model or example. Hammond. [Rare.]

Paradisal, Paradisaical (pa'a-di-sā'ik, pa'a-di-sā'ik-al), a. Pertaining to paradise, or to a place of felicity; like paradise or what belongs to it.

The paradisical pleasures of the Mahometans consist in playing upon the flute and lying with hours. Gray.

Paradisal, Paradisial (pa'a-dis-al, pa-a-dis'al), a. Same as Paradisal. [Rare.]

Paradise (pa'a-dis), n. [L. paradisi, from Gr. paradeisos, a garden. Paradeisos is a Persian word, Zend pairi-daeza, inclosed—pairi (Gr. peri), around, and daeza, a rampart, bulwark, equivalent to Skr. deha, Gr. telchos, a wall, rampart. Litté.] 1. In Script. the garden of Eden, in which Adam and Eve were placed immediately after their creation.—2. A place of bliss; a region of supreme felicity or delight.—3. Heaven, or the blissful seat of sanctified souls after death.

To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise. Luke xxiii. 43.

4. In medieval arch. (a) a small private apartment or study. (b) The garden of a convent. (c) An open court or area in front of a church. This use of the word has induced the supposition that the name paris, still applied to the same place, is a corruption of paradise.

Paradisea (pa-ra-dis'ē-a), n. A genus of conirostral birds, the type of the family Paradisæide (which see).

Paradisæan (pa-ra-dis'ē-an), a. Same as Paradisæal.

Paradisæd (pa'a-di-zd), p. and a. Placed in paradise; enjoying felicity as if in paradise; having the delights of paradise. [Rare.]

Paradisæide (pa'a-di-sē'ī-dē), n. pl. A family of birds, comprehending the birds of paradise, found chiefly in New Guinea and the neighbouring islands, the males of which are remarkable for their splendid plumage. They are very closely allied to the crows. See BIRD OF PARADISE.

Paradisæical (pa'a-di-si'ak-al), a. Pertaining or relating to paradise, or to a place of felicity; suitable to or like paradise; paradisæic.

The summer is a kind of heaven, where we wander in a paradisæical scene among groves and gardens. Pope.

Paradisian (pa-ra-dis'i-an), a. Same as Paradisæical.

Paradisic, Paradisical (pa-ra-dis'ik, pa-ra-dis'ik-al), a. Same as Paradisæical.

Parados (pa'a-dos), n. [Fr. from parer, to defend, and dos, L. dorsum, the back.] Milit. an elevation of earth behind a fortified place to protect it from attack in the rear.

Paradox (pa'a-doks), n. [Gr. paradoxon, from para, beyond, and doxa, opinion, from dokēō, to think or suppose.] A tenet or proposition contrary to received opinion; a statement or proposition which seems to be absurd, or at variance with common sense, or to contradict some previously ascertained truth, though, when properly investigated, it may be found to be perfectly well founded. 'Old fad paradoxes to make fools laugh.' Shak.

A gloss there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear in show not to be altogether unreasonable. Hooker.

—Mechanical paradox, a proposition to this effect:—'A part may be cut away from a given beam, so as to make the beam stronger than before.'—Hydrostatic paradox. See HYDROSTATIC.

Paradoxical (pa-a-doks'al), a. Paradoxical.

Paradoxical (pa-a-doks'ik-al), a. 1. Having the nature of a paradox.—2. Inclined to paradox or to tenets or notions contrary to received opinions: applied to persons.

The proposition appears to me one of the most untenable that ever was advanced by a perverse or paradoxical intellect. Southey.

Paradoxically (pa-a-doks'ik-al-li), adv. In a paradoxical manner, or in a manner seemingly absurd.

Paradoxicalness (pa-a-doks'ik-al-nes), n. State of being paradoxical.

Paradoxology (pa'a-doks-ol'ō-jī), n. [Paradox, and Gr. logos, discourse.] The use of paradoxes. Sir T. Browne.

Paradoxy (pa'a-doks-i), n. The state of being paradoxical. Coleridge.

Paradoxure (pa-a-dok'sūr), n. [Paradox, and Gr. oura, a tail.] See PALM-CAT.

Paradrome (pa-a-drōm), n. [Gr. paradromos—para, beside, and dromos, a running.] In Gr. antiqu. an uncovered space in which the wrestlers exercised.

Paraffin, Paraffine (pa'a-fin), n. [L. parum, little, and affinis, akin, from its resistance to chemical re-agents.] A substance obtained from the dry distillation of wood, peat, bituminous coal, wax, &c. It is a tasteless, inodorous, fatty matter, and resists the action of acids and alkalis. It is largely used in the manufacture of candles, which equal those of the finest wax. The main source of paraffin in the United Kingdom is bituminous shale. Paraffin is a mixture of various hydrocarbons, and receives its name from its remarkable chemical indifference, which is its characteristic feature.

Paraffin-oil (pa'a-fin-ol), n. The oily matter which is given off in large quantity in the destructive distillation of bituminous shale. The lighter oils are used for illuminating, and the heavier for lubricating purposes.

Paraffie (pa-ra'fī), n. [From Fr. parafie, a flourish after one's signature.] Ostentatious display. Sir W. Scott. [Scotch.] of name, blood, or dignity, but more especially of land in a division among heirs.—2.† Birth; parentage. Chaucer.

Paragenesis (par-a-jen'e-sis), n. [Gr. para, side by side with, and genesis, generation.] A term applied to the constitution of minerals composed of crystals which have not assumed their normal crystalline structure, either because the crystals of one constituent mineral have been first formed and prevented the other constituents from assuming their due form, or from all the constituents having been crystallized simultaneously, thus mutually impeding the development of each other.

Paragenic (par-a-jen'ik), a. [Gr. para, along with, and root gen, to beget.] In biol. originating with the germ or at the commencement of an individual's existence; applied to bodies or parts having original or congenital peculiarities of structure, character, and the like.

Parage (par-a-gō-jī), n. [Gr. paragōgē, a drawing out, from paragō, to lead beside, to protract—para, beside, and agō, to lead.] 1. The addition of a letter or syllable to the end of a word, as in the vulgar drown for drom.—2. In surg. the act of adapting the two extremities of a fractured bone to each other, or of restoring a luxated bone to its place; coaptation. Dunghison.

Paragogic, Paragogical (par-a-gōj'ik, par-a-gōj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to a parage; lengthening a word by the addition of a letter or syllable.—Paragogic letters, in the Semitic languages, letters which, by their addition to the ordinary form of the word, impart additional emphasis or mark some change in the sense.

Paragon (par'a-gon), n. [Old Fr. paragon, Mod. Fr. paragon, a paragon, from Sp. paragon, paragon, model, from the prepositions para (Fr. par) con, in comparison with.] 1. A model or pattern; especially a model or pattern of superior excellence or perfection; as, a paragon of beauty or eloquence.

He rises before us as the paragon and epitome of a whole spiritual period. Carlyle.

2.† A companion; a fellow.

Alone he rode without his paragon. Spenser.

3.† Emulation; a match for trial of excellence.—4.† A curious pattern in a garden. 'Gardens and groves exempt from paragons.' Chapman.

Paragon (par'a-gon), v.t. [Sp. paragonar, It. paragonare, to compare, to equal; Fr. paragonner. See the noun.] 1. To compare; to parallel; to mention in competition. 'If thou with Cæsar paragon again my man of men.' Shak.—2. To admit comparison with; to rival; to equal.—3.† To go beyond; to excel; to surpass. 'A maid that paragons description.' Shak.

Paragon (par'a-gon), v.t. To pretend to comparison or equality with. Skelton.

Paragram (par'a-gram), n. [Gr. paragramma, that which one writes beside—para, beside, and gramma, a writing.] A play upon words, or a pun. Addison.

Paragrammatist (par-a-gram'mat-ist), n. A punster. Addison.

Paragraph (par'a-graf), n. [Fr. paragraphe, from Gr. paragraphe, a marginal note; paragrapheō, to write near or beyond the text—para, beyond, and grapheō, to write.] 1. A marginal note placed to call attention to something in a text or indicate a change of subject; the character ¶ used as a reference, or to mark a division.—2. A distinct part of a discourse or writing; any portion or section of a writing or chapter which relates to a particular point, whether consisting of one sentence or many sentences. A paragraph is sometimes marked thus, ¶. But more generally a paragraph is distinguished only by a break in the composition or lines. Hence—3. A short passage; a brief notice, as in a newspaper and the like.

Paragraphist (par'a-graf), v.t. 1. To form into or write in paragraphs.—2. To mention or speak of in a paragraph.

Warburton paragraphed him in the Dunciad.

Blackwood's Mag.

Paragraphic, Paragraphical (par-a-graf'ik, par-a-graf'ik-al), a. Pertaining to a paragraph; consisting of or exhibiting paragraphs or short divisions or breaks in writing.

Paragraphically (par-a-graf'ik-al-li), adv. By or with paragraphs.

Paragraphist (par-a-graf-ist), n. One who writes paragraphs; one who divides into paragraphs.

Paraphrastic (par'a-graf'ist'ik-al), a. Same as Paraphrasic. Beau. & Fl.

Paraguay Tea (par'a-gwā'tē), n. The leaves of the Ilex paraguayensis, used in South America as a substitute for tea. The infusion prepared from the powdered leaves has an agreeable, slightly aromatic odour, is rather bitter and restorative, and very refreshing; but if it is too largely indulged in it debilitates the nervous system. Called also Maté. See LEX.

Paraguay Tea (Ilex paraguayensis).

Paraba (pa-ra-ē'ba), n. A Brazilian plant of the genus Simaruba, the S. versicolor of St. Hilaire. It possesses such excessive bitterness that no insects will attack it. The Brazilians use an infusion in brandy as a specific against the bite of serpents, and also employ it with great success to cure lousy diseases.

Paraille, † n. Apparel. Chaucer.

Parakeet (par'a-kēt), n. Same as Parrakeet.

Paraleipsis, Paralipsis (par-a-lip'sis), n. See PARALEPSIS.

Paralepsis, Paralepsy (par-a-lep'sis, par-a-lep'si), n. [Gr. paralepsis, omission—para, beyond or by, and leipō, to leave.] In rhet. a pretended or apparent omission; a figure by which a speaker pretends to pass by what at the same time he really mentions, in order to impress the hearers with indignation, pity, &c. The following sentence is an example: 'I do not speak of my opponent's meanness and cowardice; I make no allusion to his malignity and treachery; I take no notice of his inhuman conduct.'

Paralian (par'a-li-an), n. [Gr. paralos, near the sea—para, beside, and halos, halos, the sea.] A dweller near the sea. [Rare.]

Paralipomena (par'a-li-pom'e-na), n. [Gr. paralipomena, things omitted, from paraleipō, to omit—para, beyond, and leipō, to leave.] Things omitted; a supplement containing things omitted in the preceding work. The books of Chronicles are so called.

Parallactic, Parallactic (par-al-lak'tik, par-al-lak'tik-al), a. Pertaining to the parallax of a heavenly body.

Parallax (par'al-laks), n. [Gr. parallaxis, from parallassō, to vary, to decline or wander—para, beyond, and allassō, to change.] 1. The apparent displacement or change of position of an object when viewed from different places. Thus an observer at A sees an object B in line with an object at C, but when he moves to D it appears in line with E, and seems to have gone backward. This apparent alteration of position is called parallax, and is measured by the angle ABD, which is the angle of parallax or parallactic angle. Specifically, in astron. the difference between the position of any celestial object as viewed from the surface of the earth, and that which it would have when viewed from the centre of either the earth or the sun.—Annual parallax, the change of place in a heavenly body, in consequence of being viewed at opposite extremities of the earth's orbit. Or it is the difference in the place of a heavenly body, as seen from the earth and from the sun.—Binocular parallax, the difference between the position of an object as seen by one eye and that in which it is seen by the other, the head remaining unmoved.—Diurnal parallax, the difference between the place of a celestial body as seen from the surface and from the centre of the earth, at the same instant; or diurnal parallax is an arc of the heavens intercepted between the true place of a star (as seen from the earth's centre), and its apparent place as seen from the earth's surface. This parallax is greatest in the horizon, and diminishes as the altitude increases; for in the zenith a star has no parallax at all.—Geocentric parallax. Same as Diurnal Parallax.—Helio-centric parallax. Same as Annual Parallax.—Horizontal parallax, the geocentric parallax of the sun, moon, or a planet when in the horizon.—Parallax in altitude, the parallax of a heavenly body when elevated above the horizon.—2. In optics, the non-coincidence of the cross fibres of a telescope with the focus of the eye-glass.—Angle of parallax, the angle which the axes of the eyes, when directed towards an object, form with it at their point of contact. This angle becomes greater as the object is nearer.

Parallel (par'a-lel), a. [Gr. parallelōs—para, side by side, and allelōn, of one another.]

1. In geom. extended in the same direction, and in all parts equally distant. One body or line is parallel to another when the surfaces of the bodies or the lines are at an equal distance throughout the whole length.—Parallel coping, in building, coping of equal thickness throughout. It is used to cope inclined surfaces, such as gables, &c.—Parallel forces, forces which act in directions parallel to each other.—Parallel lines or parallels, (a) are defined by Euclid to be 'straight lines which are in the same plane, and being produced ever so far both ways, do not meet.' (b) Milit. same as Parallel.

7.—Parallel motion, (a) the name given to a contrivance invented by Watt, for converting a reciprocating circular motion into an alternating rectilinear motion. The chief a b c d, Parallel motion. e, Piston-rod. f Pump-rod.

use to which the parallel motion is applied, is to connect the pump-rod and piston-rod of a steam-engine with the working beam, in such a manner that while the points of the beam, to which these rods are attached, move in arcs of circles, the rods are made to move up and down in a straight line parallel to the sides of the cylinder. Various modes of producing this are now in use. (b) In music, the movement of two or more parts at fixed intervals, as in a succession of thirds or sixths.—Parallel roads, in geol. a phenomenon observed in Glen Roy and some other valleys of the Scottish Highlands, exhibiting very distinctly a series of parallel and nearly horizontal lines running along the sides of the hills, and entering many of the lateral glens, at levels from a few to several hundred feet above the general bed of the valley. They are supposed to have been formed by the action of a lake, whose waters were successively lowered.—Parallel rod, in locomotive engines, a rod that connects the crank-pins of the driving-wheels.—Parallel ruler, a mathematical instrument for drawing parallel lines, formed of two equal rulers, connected by two cross-bars of equal length, movable about joints, so that while the distance between the two rulers is increased or diminished, their edges always remain parallel. The best parallel rulers are those whose bars cross each other, and turn on a joint at their intersection.—Parallel sailing, sailing on a parallel of latitude.—Parallel sphere. See SPHERE.—2. Having the same direction or tendency; running in accordance with something.

When honour runs parallel with the laws of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished. Addison.

3. Continuing a resemblance through many particulars; like; similar; equal in all essential parts; as, a parallel case; a parallel passage in the Evangelists.

Parallel (par'a-lel), n. 1. A line which throughout its whole extent is equidistant from another line.

Who made the spider parallel design, 'Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line? Pope.

2. One of the circles on a sphere parallel to its equator; in geog. a line on the globe or on a map marking the latitude; a circle or part of a circle parallel to the equator.—Parallels of altitude, in astron. are small circles of the sphere parallel to the horizon; also called almucanters.—Parallels of declination are small circles of the celestial sphere parallel to the equator.—3. Direction conformable to that of another line. 'Lines that from their parallel decline.' Garth.—4. Conformity continued through many particulars or in all essential points; resemblance; likeness.

'Twixt earthly females and the moon
All parallels exactly run. Swift.

5. Comparison made; as, to draw a parallel between two characters.

He runs a laboured parallel between Schiller, Goethe, and Kotzebue; one is more this, one is more that. Carlyle.

6. Anything equal to or resembling another in all essential particulars; a counterpart.

None but thyself can be thy parallel. Pope.

7. Milit. a trench cut in the ground before a fortress, parallel to its defences, for the purpose of covering the besiegers from the guns of the place.—8. In printing, a mark of reference (thus ¶), used to direct attention to marginal and foot notes.

Parallel (pa'ra-lel), v.t. pret. & pp. paralleled; ppr. paralleling (also with ll in the second place). 1. To place so as to keep the same direction, and at an equal distance from something else; to make parallel; to make conformable.

His life is paralleled
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice. Shak.

2. To be equal to; to resemble in all essential points; to match; to correspond to.

For rapes and ravishment he parallels Nessus. Shak.

3. To show or furnish an equal to.

Well may we fight for her whom we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel. Shak.

4. To compare.

I paralleled more than once our idea of substance with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what, which supported the tortoise. Locke.

Parallel (pa'ra-lel), v.i. To be like or equal; to agree.

Sound paralleleth in many other things with the sight. Bacon.

Parallelable (pa'ra-lel-a-bl), a. That may be equalled. Ep. Hall. [Rare.]

Parallelepiped. See PARALLELOPIPED.

Parallelnerved, Parallelvenose (pa-ra-lel-nérvd, pa-ra-lel-ven'ós), a. In bot. having the lateral ribs of the leaf straight, as in Ainus glutinosus; having the veins of leaves straight and almost parallel but united at the summit, as in grasses.

Parallelism (pa'ra-lel-izm), n. 1. State of being parallel.—Parallelism of the earth's axis, that position of the terrestrial axis by which, in its annual motion round the sun, it preserves at all times the same direction, as if the orbital movement had no existence, and is carried round parallel to itself, pointing always to the same vanishing point in the sphere of the fixed stars.—2. Resemblance, or an instance of resemblance, in a number of important particulars; correspondence, as of passages in imagery, sense, or grammatical construction. 'Parallelisms in sentences, in words, and in the order of words.' Paley.—3. A comparison. 'To draw a parallelism between that ancient and this more modern nothing.' Glanville.

Parallelistic (pa'ra-lel-ist'ik), a. Of the nature of or involving parallelism.

Parallelize (pa'ra-lel-iz), v.t. To render parallel.

Parallelless (pa'ra-lel-les), a. Matchless. Beau. & Fl.

Parallelly (pa'ra-lel-li), adv. In a parallel manner; with parallelism.

Parallelogram (pa-ra-lel'ó-gram), n. [Gr. parallelogrammon—parallelós, parallel, and grammê, a stroke in writing, from graphô, to write.] 1. In geom. a four-sided figure composed of straight lines, and having its opposite sides parallel and equal.

2. Popularly, a quadrilateral figure of more length than breadth. A right-angled parallelogram is usually termed a rectangle, and when it is both rectangular and equilateral it is called a square.—Parallelogram of forces, in mech. the name given to a theorem in the composition of forces to this effect: 'Any two forces, acting at the same point, and represented in magnitude and direction by two straight lines, are equivalent to a third force, which is represented in magnitude and direction by the diagonal of the parallelogram constructed with the two lines as its adjacent sides.'

Parallelogrammatic (pa-ra-lel'ó-gram-mat'ik), a. Relating to a parallelogram.

Parallelogrammic, Parallelogrammical (pa-ra-lel'ó-gram'ik, pa-ra-lel'ó-gram'ik-al), a. Having the properties of a parallelogram.

Paralleloiped, Paralleloiped (pa-ra-lel'ó-pi-ped, pa-ra-lel'e-pi-ped), n. [The first form is incorrect. From Gr. paralleloipedon—parallelós, parallel, epipedos, plane, superficial, epipedon, a plane surface, from epi, on, pedon, ground.] In geom. a regular solid whose sides are six parallelograms of which the opposite are similar, parallel, and equal to each other, or a prism whose base is a parallelogram. A brick is a familiar example of this body.

Parallelopipedon (pa-ra-lel'ó-pi'ped-on), n. Same as Paralleloiped. Also, and more correctly, Paralleloipedon. See above.

Paralogical (pa-ra-loj'ik-al), a. Characterized by paralogism or incorrect reasoning; illogical. 'Paralogical doubt.' Sir T. Browne.

Paralogism (pa-ra-ló'jizm), n. [Gr. paralogismos—para, beyond, and logismos, reasoning, from logos, discourse, reason.] In logic, a fallacious argument or false reasoning; an error committed in demonstration when a consequence is drawn from principles which are false, or though true, are not proved; or when a proposition is passed over that should have been proved by the way. 'A paralogism not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud.' Sir T. Browne.

Paralogize (pa-ra-ló'jiz), v.i. pret. & pp. paralogized; ppr. paralogizing. [See above.] To reason falsely.

Paralogy (pa-ra-ló'ji), n. False reasoning; paralogism. Sir T. Browne.

Paralysation (pa-ra-liz'á-shon), n. The act of paralysing.

Paralyse (pa'ra-liz), v.t. pret. & pp. paralysed; ppr. paralysing. To affect with paralysis or palsy; to unnerve; to destroy or impair physical or mental energy.

Paralysis (pa-ra-lí'sis), n. [Gr. paralysis, from paralyô, to loosen, dissolve, weaken—para, beside, and lyô, to loose.] A loss or diminution of the power of motion affecting any part of the body; a loss or suspension of muscular power or action, or a loss of sensation in any part of the body; palsy. In general one side only is affected, or the upper or lower extremities. Whatever debilitates the system may produce paralysis; it is also produced by pressure upon certain parts of the brain and spinal marrow. It frequently produces a distortion of the mouth or eye, the speech becoming indistinct, and the judgment often impaired.

Paralytic, Paralytical (pa-ra-lí'fik, pa-ra-lí'fik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to paralysis; resembling paralysis.—2. Affected with paralysis or palsy. 'The cold, shaking, paralytic hand.' Prior.—3. Inclined or tending to paralysis.

Paralytic (pa-ra-lí'tik), n. A person affected with palsy. Ep. Hall.

Paralyze (pa'ra-liz), v.t. Same as Paralyse.

Paramagnetic (pa'ra-mag-net'ik), a. A term proposed by Faraday as a substitute for magnetic in contradistinction to diamagnetic.

Paramagnetism (pa-ra-mag-net-izm), n. Magnetism as opposed to diamagnetism.

Paramatta (pa-ra-mat'ta), n. A light twilled dress fabric, the web of which is combed merino wool and the warp cotton. Said to have been made originally with wool brought from Paramatta in Australia. Also written Paramat.

Parament (pa-ra-men't), n. [Sp. paramento, ornament, from parar, L. parare, to prepare, adorn.] The furniture, hangings, and ornaments of an apartment, especially of a room of state. Weale.

Paramento† (pa-ra-men'tó), n. [See PARAMENT.] Ornament; decoration.

There were cloaks, gowns, cassocks,
And other paramentos. Beau. & Fl.

Parameter (pa-ram-et'er), n. [Fr. paramètre—Gr. para, beside, and metron, measure.] In geom. a constant straight line belonging to each of the three conic sections, otherwise called the latus rectum. In the parabola the parameter of the axis is the double ordinate drawn through the focus; also, the parameter of any diameter is a third proportional to the abscissa and its corresponding ordinate, or it is a straight line quadruple of the distance between the vertex of the diameter and the directrix. In the ellipse and hyperbola the parameter of a diameter is a third proportional to that diameter and its conjugate. The term is also used in a general sense to denote the constant quantity which enters into the equation of a curve.—Parameters of the orbits, in astron. the name formerly given to what are now generally termed the elements of the orbits.

Paramo (pa'râ-mô), n. The name given in South America to a mountainous district covered with stunted trees, exposed to the winds, and in which a damp cold perpetually prevails. Brande & Cox.

Paramorph (par'a-morf), n. [Gr. para, beside, and morphê, shape.] In mineral. a pseudomorph formed by paramorphism.

See PSEUDOMORPH, PARAMORPHISM.

Paramorphism (par-a-morf'izm), n. In mineral. a term applied to designate a variety of pseudomorphism, or one of the processes by which pseudomorphism is effected, in which a change of the molecular structure of the mineral takes place without alteration of external form or chemical constitution. An example is seen in the monoclinic crystals of fused sulphur, which gradually become opaque, and are then found to be made up of crystalline particles having the trimetric form of sulphur crystallized from fusion at a low temperature. See PSEUDOMORPH.

Paramorphous (par-a-morf'us), a. Of or pertaining to paramorphism; formed by paramorphism.

Paramoudra (par-a-mou'dra), n. [According to Page the vernacular Irish name.] A peculiar flint, the gigantic potstone, common in the chalk near Norwich and Belfast. These flints appear to have been zoophytes allied to the sponges.

Paramount (pa'ra-mount), a. [Norm. paramont, also peramont, above—par or per, through, completely, and amont, above. See AMOUNT.] 1. Superior in power or jurisdiction; as, lord paramount, the supreme lord of a fee, or of lands, tenements, and hereditaments. In England the sovereign is lord paramount, of whom all the land in the kingdom is supposed to be held. But in some cases the lord of several manors is called the lord paramount.—2. Eminent; of the highest order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square galley, as a traitor paramount. Bacon.

3. Superior to all others; as, private interest is usually paramount to all other considerations.

Their paramount duty is to consult for the interests of the whole. Brougham.

Paramount (pa'ra-mount), n. The chief; the highest in rank or order. 'Their mighty paramount.' Milton.

Paramountcy (pa'ra-mount-si), n. The condition or rank of being paramount. Coleridge. [Rare.]

Paramountly (pa'ra-mount-li), adv. In a paramount manner. Coleridge.

Paramour (pa'ra-môr), n. [Fr. par amour, with love—par=L. per, by, Fr. amour, L. amor, love.] 1. † A lover; a wooer.

Upon the floor
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Courtied of many a jolly paramour. Spenser.

2. † A mistress. Shak.—3. According to present usage, one who takes the place of a husband or wife without possessing the rights.

Paranzon (pa-ran'gon), n. [Fr. See PARAGON.] A variety of black marble which the ancients obtained from Egypt and Greece. Worcester.

Paranthine (par'an-thin), n. A species of scapolite.

Para-nut (pa'ra-nut), n. (From the town of Para, in Brazil.) The Brazil-nut.

Paranymph (pa'ra-nimf), n. [Gr. paranymphos—para, by, and nymphê, a bride or spouse.] 1. In ancient Greece, a bridesman; one who accompanied the bridegroom in bringing home the bride. Milton.—2. One who countenances and supports another.

Sin hath got a paranymph and a solicitor, a warrant, and an advocate. Fer. Taylor.

Parapegm (pa-ra-pem), n. [Gr. parapegma, anything fixed beside or near a tablet—para, beside, and pēgnymi, to fix.] A brazen tablet fixed to a pillar, on which laws and proclamations were anciently engraved; also, a tablet set in a public place, containing an account of the rising and setting of the stars, eclipses, seasons, &c.

Parapet (par'a-pet), n. [It. parapetto—parare (Fr. parer), to ward off, to guard, and petto (L. pectus), the breast.] Lit. a wall or rampart to the breast or breast high: (a) milit. a wall, rampart, or elevation of earth to cover the soldiers from the attacks of the enemy in front; a breast-work. About half-way up the inner side is a ledge called a banquette, which is mounted by the troops when they are about to fire. (b) In arch. a wall or structure placed at the edges of platforms, balconies, roofs of houses, sides of bridges, &c., to prevent people from falling over. They are sometimes plain and sometimes ornamental.

Paraph (par'af), n. [Fr. parafe, paraphe, from Gr. para, beside, and graphō, to write. An abbreviation of paraphragh.] The figure formed by a flourish of a pen at the conclusion of a signature, formerly used as a provision against forgery.

In some countries (as in Spain), the paraph is still a usual addition to a signature. Brande & Cox.

Paraph (par'af), v.t. To add a paraph to; hence, to sign, especially with the initials. 'Signed or paraphed by Count Nesselrode.' Times newspaper.

Parapherna (para-fer'na), n. Same as Paraphernalia.

Paraphernal (para-fer'nal), a. Pertaining to or consisting in paraphernalia; as, paraphernal property. Bouvier.

Paraphernalia (para-fer'nā-li-a), n. pl. [L. paraphernalia bona, wife's own goods; Gr. parapherna, what a bride has over and above her dower—para, beyond, and phernē, a dowry, portion, from phērō, to bear, to bring.] In law, that which is reserved to a wife over and above her dower or dotal portion. It includes all the personal apparel and ornaments which she possesses and has used during marriage, and which are assigned to her rank and condition of life. Wharton. 2. Personal attire of a showy or accessory description; also, fittings up, equipments, &c., of an apartment or house with a view to parade, or put on or brought together for ostentation's sake; appendages; ornaments; trappings. Disraeli.

Paraphimosis (par'a-fī-mō'sis), n. [Gr. para, about, and phimōs, to bridge.] In med. stranguation of the glans penis owing to the opening of the prepuce being too narrow to allow it to be drawn from behind it. Dunglison.

Paraphonia (para-fō-ni-a), n. [Gr. para, beside, and phōnē, voice.] 1. In music, a melodic progression by the only consonances recognized in the Greek music, namely, fourths and fifths.—2. An alteration of voice.

Paraphrase (par'a-frāz), n. [Gr. paraphrasis—para, beside, and phrasis, phrase.] 1. A restatement of a text, passage, or work, giving the sense of the original in other words; generally for the sake of clearer and fuller exposition; the setting forth in clearer and ampler terms of the significance of a passage or work. When the original is in a foreign language translation and paraphrase may be combined.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense. Dryden.

2. A sacred song or hymn on a selected portion of Scripture; as, the paraphrases appended to the metrical version of the Psalms in the Scottish Bibles.

Paraphrase (par'a-frāz), v.t. pret. & pp. paraphrased; ppr. paraphrasing. To explain, interpret, or translate with latitude; to unfold the sense of an author with more clearness and particularity than it is expressed in his own words.

We are put to construe and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillington.

Paraphrase (par'a-frāz), v.i. To interpret or explain amply; to make a paraphrase.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase. Fellon.

Paraphrast (par'a-frast), n. [Gr. paraphrastēs. See PARAPHRASE.] One who paraphrases; one who explains or translates in words more ample and clear than the word of the author.

Paraphrastic, Paraphrastical (par-a-fras'tik, par-a-fras'tik-al), a. Having the character of a paraphrase; free, clear, and ample in explanation; explaining or translating in words more clear and ample than those of the author; not verbal or literal. 'He is sometimes too paraphrastical.' Johnson.

Paraphrastically (par-a-fras'tik-al-li), adv. In a paraphrastic manner.

Chapman, in his translation of Homer, professes to have done it somewhat paraphrastically. Dryden.

Paraphrenitis (par'a-frē-nī'tis), n. [Gr. para, beside, near to, and phrenitis, delirium.] An inflammation of the diaphragm: so named because it produces effects similar to those produced by phrenitis, frenzy, or inflammation of the brain. Arbuthnot.

Paraphrosyne (par-a-fros'i-nē), n. [Gr. paraphrosynē, a wandering of mind, from paraphrōn, deranged—para, beyond, and phrēn, the mind.] Mental derangement; delirium. Dunglison.

Paraphysis (par-af'i-sis), *n. pl. Paraphyses (par-af'i-sēz), n. [Gr., a side-process—para, beyond, and physis, nature, growth.] A term used in describing mosses, applied to any of the sessile, ovate, abortive bodies placed below the theca.*

Paraplegia, Paraplegy (par-a-plē'ji-a, par'a-plē-jī), n. [Gr. paraplegia, paralysis—para, beyond, and plegē, stroke, from pleōō, to smite.] That kind of palsy which affects the lower part of the body, including the bladder and rectum. It is usually caused by disease of the spinal cord. Dunglison.

Parapodium (par-a-pō'di-um), *n. pl. Parapodia (par-a-pō'di-a), n. [Gr. para, beside, and pous, podos, the foot.] One of the unarticulated lateral locomotive processes or foot-tubercles of many of the Annelida.*

Parapophysis (par-a-pōf'i-sis), n. [Gr. para, beside, and apophysis, an outgrowth, an offshoot—apo, away, and physis, growth.] In compar. anat. a name given to the transverse process of an ideal typical vertebra; also, the name of the vertebral processes of fishes which extend outwards, or outwards and downwards.

Parapoplexy (par-ap'ō-plek-si), n. [Gr. para, beside, near, and apoplexia, apoplexy.] A sleepy state resembling apoplexy; false apoplexy.

Parquet (par-a-ke't), n. A parrakeet.

Parasang (par'a-sang), n. [Gr. parasanges, Per. farsang, a parasang.] A Persian measure of length, which Herodotus states to be 30 stadia, and (reckoning 8 stadia to the English mile) equal to 3½ English miles. But in different times and places it has been 30, 40, or 60 stadia.

Parascene, Parascenium (par-a-sēn', par-a-sē-ni-um), n. [Gr. para, beyond, and skēnē, the stage in a theatre.] In Rom. antiq. the place beyond the stage of a theatre, used by the actors as a dressing-room; the tiring-room.

Parasceustic (par'a-sū-as'tik), a. [Gr. parasceustikos, from prefix para, and skeue, equipment.] Preparatory. [Rare.]

Parasceve (par-a-sēvē), n. [Gr. paraskeuē, preparation.] 1. Preparation. Doane.—2. The Sabbath-eve of the Jews.

It was the parasceve, which is the Sabbath-eve. Mark xv. 42, Rhenish trans.

Paraselene (para-se-lē'nē), n. pl. Parase-

Paraselene.

lenē (par'a-se-lē'nē), [Gr. para, about or near, and selenē, the moon.] A mock moon; a luminous ring or circle encompassing the moon, in which sometimes are other bright spots bearing some resemblance to the moon. Two or more rings may sometimes be seen at once, particularly in the polar regions, where the phenomenon appears with great brilliancy. Paraselenae are analogous to the parhelia or mock suns, and are supposed to depend upon the presence of innumerable minute crystals of ice, which multiply the image of the moon. See PARHELION.

Parasite (par'a-sit), n. [Fr. parasite, from L. parasitus, from Gr. parasitos, one who eats beside or at the table of another, a parasite, a toady—para, beside, and sitos, food.] One that frequents the tables of the rich and earns his welcome by flattery; a trencher friend; a hanger-on; a dependant companion; a fawning flatterer; a sycophant.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning parasite, obey'st. Milton.

Hence, (a) an animal that lives upon or in, and at the expense of, other animals. (b) A plant which grows upon another plant, and feeds upon its juices. See PARASITIC.

Parasitic (par-a-sit'ik), a. 1. Of the nature of a parasite; fawning for bread or favours; meanly dependent on others for support; acting the sycophant or low hanger-on. 'Parasitic preachers.' Milton.—2. In bot. and zool. growing or living as a parasite grows.—Parasitic animals, those animal forms which attach themselves to the exterior, or inhabit various situations in the interior of the bodies of other animals. They are of various kinds and degrees of organization, and belong to different groups of the animal kingdom, ranging from the Protozoa even to the Vertebrata. The tapeworm and the ordinary louse are familiar examples of parasitic animals.—Parasitic plants are those which grow upon the living parts of other plants, from whose juices they derive their nutriment, a circumstance by which they are immediately distinguished from false parasites or epiphytes, which merely fix themselves upon other plants without deriving food from them. The mistletoe is a familiar example of a true parasite. Parasitic plants, properly so called, are very numerous, and belong to various parts of the vegetable kingdom.—3. In philol. attached to a word erroneously or by false analogy; thus d in vulgar dround, t in margent are parasitic.

Parasitical (par-a-sit'ik-al), a. Same as Parasitic.

Parasitically (par-a-sit'ik-al-li), adv. In the manner of a parasite; in a flattering or wheedling manner; by dependence on another. Sir T. Herbert.

Parasiticalness (par-a-sit'ik-al-nes), n. Quality of being parasitical. [Rare.]

Parasiticide (par-a-sit'ik-sid), n. [E. parasite, and L. cædo, to kill.] Any agent for destroying parasites on the bodies of animals or vegetables.

Parasitism (par-a-sit-izm), n. 1. The behaviour or manners of a parasite.

Their high notion, we rather believe, falls as low as court parasitism, supposing all men to be servants but the king. Milton.

2. The state or condition of being a parasite on animals or plants.

Hæckel regards the Gregarinæ as Amebæ which have become degenerate by parasitism.

Parasitology (par'a-sit'ol'o-jī), n. [E. parasite, and Gr. logos, discourse.] That branch of natural science which concerns itself with parasites.

Parasol (par'a-sol), n. [Fr. parasol, from It. parasole—parare (Fr. parer), to ward off, and sole (L. sol), the sun.] A small umbrella used by ladies to defend their faces from the sun's rays.

Parasollette (par'a-sol-et'), n. (Dim. of parasol.) A small parasol.

Parhelia are sometimes double, sometimes triple, and sometimes more numerous. They appear at the same height above the horizon as the true sun, and they are always connected with one another by a white horizontal circle or halo. They are the result of certain modifications which light undergoes when it falls on the crystals of ice, rain-drops, or minute particles that constitute suitably situated clouds. Parhelia which appear on the same side of the circle with the true sun are often tinted with prismatic colours.

Parhelium (pär-heli-um), n. Same as Parhelia. [Rare.]

Pariah (pä'ri-a), n. A name somewhat loosely applied to any of the lowest class of people in Hindustan, who have, properly speaking, no caste; hence, one despised and condemned by society; an outcast.

The Hebrew child has entered adolescence only to learn that he was the pariah of that ungrateful Europe that owes to him the best part of its laws, a fine portion of its literature, all its religion.

Disraeli.

Properly, however, Pariah (a Tamil name) is applied to the members of a somewhat widely spread race in Southern India, generally of the Hindu religion, and though regarded by the Hindus as of the lowest grade, yet superior to some ten other castes in their own country. Among themselves there are said to be thirteen classes or divisions. They are frequently serfs to the agricultural class, or servants to Europeans. —Pariah dog, a name given in the East Indies to a masterless dog.

Parial (pä'ri-al), n. Same as Pair-royal.

Parian (pä'ri-an), a. Pertaining to Paros, an isle in the Egean Sea. —Parian Chronicle. Paris (pä'ris), n. [From L. par, paris, equal, in allusion to the regularity of the parts.] A genus of plants of the nat. order Trilliacæ. P. quadrifolia (herb-paris, true-love, or one-berry) is not uncommon in Britain, being found in moist shady woods. It has a simple stem bearing a whorl of four ovate leaves near the summit, and a solitary greenish flower. The fruit is a purplish black berry, which is said to be poisonous and narcotic, but the juice of which has been used to cure inflammation of the eyes. The roots are purgative.

Paris Basin (pä'ris bäs'n), n. In geol. the great area of tertiary strata on which Paris is situated. The basin extends to about 180 miles in length, from north-east to south-west, and to about 100 miles in width from east to west. The Paris basin has a thickness of several hundred feet of marls, limestones, sandstones, sands, and clays. Besides a rich fauna of marine and freshwater mollusca, the remains of mammals are abundant and interesting from their affinity to living forms.

Paris-blue (pä'ris-blü), n. A bright blue obtained by heating aniline with chloride of tin. Ure.

Paris-garden (pä'ris-gär'dn), n. A bear-garden; a noisy, disorderly place: in allusion to the bear-garden so called on the Thames bank-side, kept by Robert de Paris in the reign of Richard II.

Do you take the court for Paris-garden? ye rude slaves. Shak.

Parish (pä'rish), n. [Fr. paroisse, L.L. paræcia, neighbourhood, an ecclesiastical district; from Gr. paroikia, a parish, a neighbourhood, from para, beside, and oikos, a house, a dwelling.] 1. The precinct or territorial jurisdiction of a secular priest; circuit of ground or district inhabited by people who belong to one church, and are under the particular charge of its minister; a district having its own offices for the legal care of the poor, &c. In the earliest ages of the Church the name parish was applied to the district placed under the superintendence of the bishop, and was equivalent to the diocese. Parishes were originally ecclesiastical divisions, but now, in England especially, a parish is an important subdivision of the country for purposes of local self-government, most of the local rates and taxes being confined within that area, and to a certain extent self-imposed. In Scotland the division into parishes is also recognized for certain civil purposes as well as for purposes purely ecclesiastical. A district that forms a parish only so far as purely ecclesiastical matters are concerned is, in Scotland, called a quoad sacra parish.—2. In the United States, an ecclesiastical society not bounded by territorial limits, but composed of those persons who choose to unite under the charge of a particular priest or minister.

Parish (pä'rish), a. 1. Of or belonging to a parish; parochial; as, parish minister; parish church; parish records.—2. Maintained by the parish; as, parish poor.

Parity (pá'ri-ti), n. [Fr. parité, L. paritas, equality, parity, from par, equal.] The condition of being equal or equivalent; like state or degree; equality; close correspondence; analogy; as, parity of reasoning.

Where there is no parity of principle, there is no basis for comparison.

De Quincy.

Park (párk), n. [A word occurring in the Teutonic, Romance, and Celtic tongues, and of somewhat doubtful origin, but probably from L.L. parvus, a park, an inclosure for animals, from L. parcare, to spare, the literal meaning being thus a piece of land reserved. The E. park may therefore be directly from Fr. parc, with which the earlier A. Sax. pearruc, a park, would combine and so disappear.] 1. In a legal sense, a large piece of ground inclosed and privileged for wild beasts of chase, by the monarch's grant, or by prescription. The only distinction between a chace and a park was, that the latter was inclosed, whereas a chace was always open, and they both differed from a forest, inasmuch as they had no peculiar courts or judicial officers, nor any particular laws.—2. A considerable extent of pasture and woodland, surrounding or adjoining a mansion-house, devoted to purposes of recreation or enjoyment, but chiefly to the support of a herd of deer, though sometimes to cattle and sheep.—3. Any piece of public ground, generally in or near a large town, laid out and cultivated for the sole purpose of pleasure and recreation, without any regard to the size of the ground or the style of the arrangement.—4. In Scotland, an inclosed piece of ground suitable for tillage or pasture; a cultivated field.—5. † A large net placed on the margin of the sea, with only one entrance, which is next the shore, and is left dry by the ebb of the tide. Hollyband.—Park of artillery or artillery park, the train of artillery, with carriages, cannon, ammunition, &c., which accompanies an army to the field; also, the space occupied by such a train.—Engineer park, the whole equipment of stores, intrenching tools, &c., belonging to the engineer department in the field; also, the place where these are stored, and where the officers and men of this branch are camped.—Park of provisions, the place where the sutlers pitch their tents and sell provisions, and that where the bread wagons are stationed.—Park hack, a horse hired for use in a public park.—Park phaeton, a small, low carriage for use in parks.

Park (párk), v.t. 1. To inclose in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer. Shak.

2. To bring together in a park or compact body; as, to park the artillery. De Quincy.

Parka (pár'ka), n. A curious fossil from the old red sandstone of Scotland and England. They are egg packets, probably of some species of the crustacean genus Pterygotus, which is found in the same beds.

Did from the Norman win a gallant wreath. Wordsworth.

—To beat or sound a parley (mílt), to beat a drum or sound a trumpet, as a signal for holding a conference with the enemy.

Parliament (pár-li-ment), n. [Fr. parlement (Sp. It. and Pg. parlamento), composed of parler, to speak, and the term. -ment, as in complement, &c. See PARLEY.] 1. A meeting or assembly of persons for conference or deliberation; an assembly of the people or their representatives to deliberate or legislate on national affairs; a supreme national or general council.

Till the war-drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were fur'd,
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world. Tennyson.

2. The grand assembly of the three estates of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the lords spiritual, lords temporal, and the commons; the general council of the nation constituting the legislature, summoned by the sovereign's authority to consult on the affairs of the nation, and to enact and repeal laws. Primarily, the sovereign may be considered as a constituent branch of parliament; but the word is generally used to denote the three estates above named, consisting of two distinct branches, the House of Lords and House of Commons. The House of Lords includes lords spiritual and temporal; the former being archbishops and bishops, the latter dukes or princes of the blood royal, other dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons—all being 'peers of the United Kingdom;' to these were added, by treaties of union with Scotland in 1707, and Ireland in 1800, 16 Scotch and 28 Irish representative peers, chosen by the general nobility in each country—the Scotch representative peers for each successive parliament, the Irish representative peers for life. According to the Acts of 1884 and 1885, the British House of Commons should consist of 670 members, viz.

England and Wales, 253 representatives of counties, 287 of cities and boroughs, and 5 of universities; Scotland, 89 representatives of counties, 51 of cities and boroughs, and 2 of universities; Ireland, 85 representatives of counties, 16 of cities and boroughs, and 2 of universities. The authority of parliament extends over the United Kingdom, and all its colonies and foreign possessions. It must meet at least once a year for the despatch of business. The word parliament was introduced into England under the Norman kings. The supreme council of the nation was called under the Saxon kings witenagemot, the meeting of wise men or sages.—Act of parliament, a statute, law, or edict made by the sovereign, with the advice and consent of the lords temporal and spiritual, and the commons in parliament assembled. They cannot be altered, amended, dispensed with, suspended, or repealed but by the same authority of parliament which created them.—3. In France, before the revolution of 1789, one of several principal judicial courts of the country.—4. In law, an assembly of the members of the two Temples (Inner and Middle) to consult upon the affairs of the society.—5. Ginger-bread in small, thin, hard cakes. 'Gorging the boy with apples and parliament.' Thackeray.—Parliament heel (naut.), the situation of a ship when careened by shift of ballast, &c.; or the causing her to incline a little on one side so as to clean the side turned out of water, and cover it with fresh composition.

&c., A. Sax. peterselie, Fr. persil, from L. petroselinum, Gr. petroselinon, rock-parsley; petra, a rock, and selinon, a kind of parsley; D. pieterselie, G. petersilie, Dan. petersille, have the same origin.] A plant of the genus Petroselinum, nat. order Umbellifere, distinguished by having each half of the fruit with five equal narrow ribs, and one oil vessel in each furrow, the line of junction having two. The species are annual or biennial. Common parsley (P. sativum) is a well-known garden vegetable, used for communicating an aromatic and agreeable flavour to soups and other dishes. It is a native of Sardinia, introduced into this country about the middle of the sixteenth century. A variety with curled leaflets is generally preferred to that with plain leaflets, as being finer flavoured. Hamburg parsley, a variety with a large white root like a carrot, is cultivated for its roots, and much in the same way as carrots or parsneps.

Parsnip, Parsnep (pär'snip, pärs'nep), n. [Corrupted from L. pastinaca, a parsnip, from pastinum, a kind of two-pronged dibble, and nip, nep, L. napus, a turnip.] A plant of the genus Pastinaca, nat. order Umbellifere, the P. sativa (common or garden parsnip), of which there are many varieties. It is a tall erect plant, with pinnate leaves and bright yellow flowers, common throughout England and in most parts of Europe, and much cultivated for its roots, which have been used as an esculent from a very early period.

climbing. The tarsi are generally short and strong, the toes being arranged two forwards and two backwards. The tongue, unlike that of most other birds, is soft and fleshy throughout its whole extent. The wings are of moderate size, but the tail is often elongated, and in some cases assists these birds in climbing. These birds are found almost everywhere in warm and tropical climates, and comprise a vast number of species, varying very much in size, from the great macaw, which is more than 3 feet in length, to the little love-birds, which are not larger than sparrows. They breed in hollow trees, and subsist on fruits and seeds. Several species can not only imitate the various tones of the human voice, but also exercise in some cases actual conversational powers. The most highly Partheniad (pärt-thé-ni-ad), n. [Gr. parthenos, a virgin, and ōdē, a song.] A poem in honour of a virgin.

Parthenic (pärt-thén'ik), a. [Gr. parthenos, a virgin.] Pertaining to the Spartan Parthenia, or illegitimate children born in Laconia during the absence of the warriors at the first Messenian war.

Parthenogenesis (pärt-thé-nō-jen'e-sis), n. [Gr. parthenos, a virgin, and genesis, production.] 1. In zool. a term applied to the production of new individuals from virgin or rather imperfect females without the intervention of a male; the successive production of procreating individuals from a single ovum, without any renewal of fertilization. Parthenogenesis is one of the phenomena of so-called alternate generation. Called also Digenesis.—2. In bot. the production of perfect seed with embryo, without the application of pollen.

By Professor Owen, who first employed the term, parthenogenesis is applied also to the processes of gemination and fission, as exhibited in sexless beings or in virgin females; but it seems best to consider these phenomena separately. Strictly, the term parthenogenesis ought to be confined to the production of new individuals from virgin females by means of ova, which are enabled to develop themselves without the contact of the male element.

H. A. Nicholson.
Parthenology (pärt-thé-nō'l-ō-jī), n. [Gr. parthenos, a virgin, and logos, discourse.] In pathol. a description or consideration of the state of virginity in health or disease.

Parthenon (pärt-thé-non), n. [Gr., from parthenos, a virgin, i.e. Minerva.] A celebrated Grecian temple of Minerva, or more properly Athena Parthenos, on the Acropolis of Athens. It was built of marble, and was a peripteral octostyle, with 17 columns on the sides; its length 223 feet, breadth 102, and height to the base of the pediments 65 feet. It was almost reduced to ruins in 1687 by the explosion of a quantity of gunpowder which the Turks had placed in it, during the siege of Athens by the Venetians. Part of the Parthenon ruins has been utilized in modern buildings, and the more precious pieces of sculpture have been dispersed among various European collections, yet nevertheless it still bears an imposing aspect.

Parthenope (pärt-thén'p-è), n. [From Parthenope, the ancient and poetical name of Naples.] One of the small planets or asteroids between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter, discovered by M. De Gasparis, of Naples, 11th May, 1850. It revolves round the sun in 1402 days, and is about two-and-a-half times the distance of the earth from the sun.

The weakening of a thing is only a partial destruction of it. South.

2. Biassed to one party; inclined to favour one party in a cause, or one side of a question more than the other; not indifferent.

Self-love will make men partial to themselves and friends. Locke.

3. Inclined to favour without principle or reason. 'A fond and partial parent.' Pope.

To observations which ourselves we make,
We grow more partial for the observer's sake. Pope.

4. More strongly inclined to one thing than to others; having a predilection; fond. 'Not partial to an inordinate display of wealth.' Sir W. Scott.—5. In bot. being one of several subordinates: applied to subdivisions, as, a partial umbel; a partial peduncle; a partial involucre, one placed at the foot of a partial umbel.—Partial counsel, in Scots law, improper advice or communications to one of the parties in a cause rendering the testimony of a witness inadmissible; a similar ground of declinature of the jurisdiction of a judge.—Partial differential, in math. a differential of a function of two or more variables, obtained by differentiating with respect to one of the variables only.—Partial fractions, in alg. fractions whose algebraical sum is equal to a given fraction.—Partial loss, in marine insurance, is one in which the damage done to the thing insured is not so complete as to amount to a total loss, either actual or constructive. The insurer is therefore not entitled to abandon or give up the remains of the ship or cargo, and claim the entire insurance money; but he is bound to keep his ship or goods, and claim only in proportion to his actual loss or damage.

Participialize (pär-tis'i-pi'-al-iz), v.t. To form into a participle. [Rare.]

Participially (pär-tis'i-pi'-al-i), adv. In the sense or manner of a participle.

Participle (pär'ti-si-pl), n. [L. participium, from particeps, participating, partaking—pars, partis, a part, and capio, to take; comp. principium, from L. principium.] 1. In gram. a part of speech, so called because it partakes of the character both of a verb and an adjective. The participle differs from the adjective in that it implies time, and therefore applies to a specific act, whereas the adjective designates only an attribute, as a habitual quality or characteristic, without regard to time. Thus 'Jupiter tonans' may be translated either 'Jupiter when thundering' or 'Jupiter who is in the habit of thundering'; that is, 'thundering Jupiter'. In the former case tonans, as well as its English equivalent, is a participle; in the latter both are adjectives. When we say, 'he has learned his lesson,' we have regard to a specific act done at a certain time; but in the phrase 'a learned man,' learned designates a habitual quality. In the former case learned is a participle; in the latter, an adjective. There are two participles in English: the present—ending in -ing, and the past—ending, in regular verbs, in -ed. The verbal noun in -ing, often said to be the present participle used as a noun, in reality represents the Anglo-Saxon termination -ing, -ung, of verbal substantives. Participles often lose their original verbal properties and become adjectives; as, will-ing, in the phrase, a will-ing heart; engag-ing, as engag-ing manners; accomplish-ed, as an accomplish-ed orator.—2. Anything that partakes of the nature of different things.

The participles or confiners between plants and living creatures, are such chiefly as are fixed, . . . though they have a motion in their parts; such as are oysters, cockles, and such like.

Bacon.

Particle (pär'ti-kl), n. [Fr. particule; L. particula, dim. of pars, partis, part.] 1. A minute part or portion of matter, the aggregation of which parts constitutes the whole mass.

There is not one grain in the universe, . . . nor so much as any one particle of it, that mankind may not be either the better or the worse for, according as it is applied.

Sir R. L'Esrange.

2. Any very small portion or part; as, he has not a particle of patriotism or virtue; he would not resign a particle of his property.

From any of the other unreasonable demands, the houses had not given their commissioners authority in the least particle to recede.

Parting day

Dies like the dolphin, whom each pang imbueth

With a new colour as it gasps away,

The last still loveliest. Byron.

Parting (pär'ting), n. 1. The act of dividing or separating; a division; a separation; that which is divided. 'And there were sudden partings.' Byron. 'The parting of the way.' Eze. xxi. 21.—2. In metal. an operation by which gold and silver are separated from each other by different menstrua.—3. In geol. a fissure in strata; any thin subordinate layer occurring between two main beds.—4. The division of the hair on the head.

Parting-bead (pär'ting-béd), n. The beaded slip inserted into the centre of the pulley style to keep apart the upper and lower sashes of a window.

Parting-sand (pär'ting-sand), n. In moulding, dry sand placed between the two members of a mould to facilitate their separation.

Partisan (pär'ti-zan), n. [Fr., from parti, a party, from L. pars, partis, a part.] 1. An adherent of a party or faction; one who is violently and passionately devoted to a party or interest.

John Locke hated tyranny and persecution as a philosopher; but his intellect preserved him from the violence of a partisan. Macaulay.

2. Milit. (a) a member of a party or detachment of troops sent on a special enterprise. (b) A person able in commanding such a party, or dexterous in obtaining intelligence, intercepting convoys, or otherwise annoying an enemy.

Partition (pär'ti-shon), n. [L. partitio, from partio, partitum, to divide, to part.] 1. The act of parting or dividing; the act of separating into portions and distributing; as, the partition of a kingdom among several other states.—2. The state of being divided; division; separation; distinction. 'An union in partition.' Shak. 'And good from bad find no partition.' Shak.—3.† Separate part; apartment; compartment. 'Lodged in a small partition.' Milton.—4. That by which different parts are separated; as, (a) in arch. a wall of stone, brick, or timber, which serves to divide one apartment from another in a building. (b) In bot. the division of a partite leaf; also, the wall of a cell in an ovary or fruit; a dissepiment.

Great wits are sure to madness near allied,

And thin partitions do their bounds divide. Dryden.

5. Part where separation is made.

No sight could pass
Betwixt the nice partitions of the grass. Dryden.

6. In law, division, as of an estate into severalty, which is done by deed of partition.—

7. In music, the arrangement of the several parts of a composition on the same page or pages, above and under one another, so that they may be all under the eye of the conductor or performer. Commonly called a Score.—8. In her. one of the several divisions made in a coat when the arms of several families are borne all together in one shield on account of intermarriages or otherwise. (See QUARTERING.) Used adjectively; as, partition lines, in her. those lines by which the shield is cut or divided perpendicularly, diagonally, &c., as the party per pale, party per bend, &c.—Partition wall, a dividing wall. 'A great partition wall to keep others out.' Dr. H. More.—Partitions of numbers, in math. the resolution of integers into parts subject to given conditions.

Partition (pär'ti-shon), v.t. 1. To divide by walls or partitions.

These sides I understand to be uniform without though severally partitioned within. Bacon.

2. To divide into shares; as, to partition an estate.

Partnership (pär'tnér-ship), n. 1. The state or condition of being a partner; joint interest; participation with another.

He does possession keep,

And is too wise to hazard partnership. Dryden.

2. The association of two or more persons for the purpose of undertaking and prosecuting conjointly any business, occupation, or calling. Or a voluntary contract by words or writing, between two or more persons, for joining together their money, goods, labour, skill, or all or any of them, upon an agreement that the gain or loss shall be divided in certain proportions amongst them, depending upon the amount of money, capital, stock, &c., furnished by each partner. The duration of the partnership may be limited by the contract or agreement, or it may be left indefinite, subject to be dissolved by mutual agreement. The members of a partnership are called nominal when they have not any actual interest in the trade or business, or its profits; but, by allowing their names to be used hold themselves out to the world as apparently having an interest; dormant or sleeping, when they are merely passive in the firm, in contradistinction to those who are active and conduct the business as principals, and who are known as ostensible partners. A partnership may be limited to a particular transaction or branch of business, without comprehending all the adventures in which any one partner may embark. When the partners in a firm exceed ten where the partnership is for banking purposes, and twenty in other cases, the partnership must be registered under the Companies Act of 1862. In Scots law, the partnership is treated as a distinct person, the partners being only its sureties, so that in actions by or against the firm, the individual partners need not be named. Each partner may also sue the firm as if it were a distinct person, and the firm may be made bankrupt without the goods of any of the partners being sequestrated.—3. The name of a rule in arithmetic. See FELLOWSHIP.

Part-owner (pär't-ön-ér), n. In law, a joint owner or tenant in common, who has a distinct, or at least an independent, although an undivided interest in property along with another or others.

Passiflora (pas-i-flò'ra), n. [L. passio, passion, from patior, passus, to suffer, and flor, floris, a flower.] A large genus of twining plants, belonging to the natural order Passifloraceae, whose name is derived from the first Spanish settlers in America imagining that they saw in its flowers a representation of our Lord's passion; the filamentous processes being taken to represent the crown of thorns, the nail-shaped styles the nails of the cross, and the five anthers the marks of the wounds. The genus comprehends a large number of species, chiefly found in a wild state in America, and within or near the tropical parts of the continent. They are all twining plants, often scrambling over trees to a considerable length, and in many cases are most beautiful objects, on account of their large, rich, or gaily-coloured flowers, which are often succeeded by large handsome orange-coloured edible fruits, for which indeed they are chiefly valued in the countries where they grow wild. P. laurifolia produces the water-lemon of the West Indies, and P. maliformis bears the sweet calabash. They are called commonly passion-flower, a name which is applied more especially to P. cœrulea, which is commonly cultivated in England out of doors, and is the one to which the genus owes its name.

Passifloraceae (pas'i-flò-rä'së-ë), n. pl. A nat. order of usually climbing shrubs, with alternate simple or compound leaves, usually with tendrils, and usually large handsome flowers, of which the genus Passiflora is the type. It is very closely allied to Cucurbitaceae, but is distinguishable by its peculiar filamentous crown and by its superior ovary, exclusive of all other marks. The species chiefly inhabit the warmer parts of America and the East and West Indies.

A government grant giving a certain individual or individuals the sole right to make use, or dispose, of some new invention or discovery for a certain limited period, which in Britain may run to fourteen years, or even longer, should the inventor be able to prove that the invention, though of great public utility, has been up till that time almost unprofitable to him. In England letters patent are obtained upon petition and affidavit to the crown, setting forth that the petitioner has, after great labour and expense, made a certain discovery which he describes, and which he believes will be of great public utility, and that he is the first inventor. The person applying for a patent must furnish a provisional specification along with his application, giving a general account of the nature of the article or invention he wishes to be patented. These are submitted to an official examiner, and if his report is favourable, the application is accepted. The applicant has then to furnish a complete specification within nine months; if a longer time elapse, the application is deemed to be abandoned. The complete specification is also officially examined, and if approved is printed and published, but the patent is not granted till after two months, during which time any person may oppose the grant on the ground that the invention is not new, that it does not belong to the applicant, that it has already been used for purposes of profit, &c. After the patent is granted, a renewal fee must be paid at the end of four years, otherwise the patent will lapse. A patent once granted may be revoked. The patent laws differ much in the different foreign countries and British colonies. Patents are best obtained by means of Patent Agents, who now form an incorporated body.

Fr. peis, W. pis, a pea, all from L. pisum, Gr. pisos, a pea, from a root pis, seen in L. pinso, Skr. piśh, to bray. Pea is a corruption, the s of the root being mistaken for the sign of the plural. This is one of the few words in English ending in -ea—flæa, plea, sea, yea, lea, and tea being the others. In the plural we write peas for two or more individual seeds, but pease for an indefinite number in quantity and bulk. We write two, three or four peas, but a bushel of pease.] A plant and its fruit, of the genus Pisum, the P. sativum, of many varieties. This plant has a papilionaceous flower, and the pericarp is a legume, called in popular language a pod. It is a native of the south of Europe, and has been cultivated from remote antiquity. It forms one of the most valuable of culinary vegetables; it contains much farinaceous and saccharine matter, and is therefore highly nutritious. It is cultivated in the garden and in the field. The pods contain one row of round seeds which are at first soft and juicy, in which state they are used for the table under the name of green peas. They afterwards dry and become farinaceous, and the stem dries up. In this state they are thrashed and stored up for use like corn. A white sort, which readily split when subjected to the action of millstones, is used in considerable quantities for soups, and especially for sea-stores. There is a blue sort which answers the same purpose.—Everlasting pea. See EVERLASTING-PEA.—Issue pea. See under ISSE.—Pea of an anchor, the bill of an anchor.

Pea-beetle (pë'bë-tl), n. A coleopterous insect (Bruchus pisi), about $\frac{1}{2}$ inch long, black, variegated with bright brown hairs, with white spots and dots on the wing-cases. Peach (pēch), n. [Fr. pêche, It. pesca, persica, from L. persica, Persicum (malum), the Persian apple.] A tree and its fruit, of the genus Amygdalus, the A. persica, Linn., of many varieties. This is a delicious fruit, the produce of warm or temperate climates. The tree is of moderate stature, but varies in this respect according to soil and climate.

Peach (Amygdalus persica).

It belongs to the nat. order Rosaceæ. The varieties of the fruit, which is a large downy drupe containing a stone, are very numerous, differing in size, flavour, and time of ripening, but they are principally of two sorts, the free-stones and the cling-stones. The peach-tree is supposed to have been introduced into Europe from Persia.

Peach (pēch), n. A Cornish miner's term given to chlorite and chloritic rocks. A peachy lode is a mineral vein composed of this substance, generally of a bluish-green colour and rather soft.

Peach (pēch), v.t. [Abbrev. of impeach.] To impeach; to betray one's accomplice; to turn informer. [Low.]

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first, and see whose oath will be believed.

Peachy (pē'chī), a. Containing or resembling peaches.

Peacock (pē'kok), n. [In Pea, in this word = A. Sax. pawca, G. pāu, Dan. paa (fugl); Icel. pá or páfugl, all from L. pavo, a peacock, the name being perhaps from the cry of the bird.] A large and beautiful gallinaceous bird of the genus Pavo, properly the male of the species, but in usage the name is applied to the species in general, though the female is, for distinction's sake, called a peahen. The peacock common in this country, P. cristatus, is a native of India. This bird is characterized by a crest of peculiar form, and by the tail coverts of the male extending far beyond the quills, and being capable of erection into a broad and gorgeous disk. The shining, lax, and silky barbs of these feathers, and the eye-like spots which decorate their extremities, are known to every one. The peacock is said to have been introduced into Europe by Alexander the Great. The only other species recorded is the P. muticus (javanicus), the Javanese or Thibet peacock. These birds, which are rather larger than a pheasant, and highly elegant and beautiful, inhabit some of the south-eastern parts of Asia and the neighbouring islands. Called also Pea-fowl.

Peacock-butterfly (pē'kok-but-ēr-ifi), n. A name given by collectors of insects to butterflies of the species Vanessa Io, from the eyes on their wings resembling the eyes on peacocks' feathers.

Peacock-fish (pē'kok-fish), n. A fish of the Mediterranean and Indian Seas (Crenilabrus pavo), characterized by the brilliancy of its hues—green, yellow, and red.

Pea-cod (pē'kod), n. Same as Peas-cod. Sir W. Scott.

Pea-dove (pē'duv), n. The Columba zenaida, a pretty pigeon found in North America and in the West Indies.

Pea-fowl (pē'foul), n. Same as Peacock.

Pea-grit (pē'grit), n. In geol. a coarse limestone of the lower oolite, whose structure is not unlike a mass of split pease concreted together.

Pea-gun (pē'gun), n. A small tube to blow peas through.

Peahen (pē'hen), n. The hen or female of the peacock. See PEACOCK.

Pea-jacket (pē'jak-et), n. [Pea, from D. and L.G. pīje, coarse, thick cloth, a warm jacket; Goth. paia, cloth, a garment.] A thick loose woollen jacket worn by seamen, fishermen, &c.

Peak (pēk), n. [Fr. pic, a mountain peak, a pick, pique, a pike, from Armor. pic, W. wig, a point, a pike, a beak; whence also beak, pique, pick, peak.] 1. The top of a hill or mountain, ending in a point; as, a rocky peak.

Like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific—and all his men
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise—
Silent upon a peak in Darien.

2. A projecting point; the end of anything that terminates in a point; specifically, a projecting portion on a head-covering; the leather projecting in front of a cap.—

3. Naut. the upper corner of a sail which is extended by a gaff or yard; also, the extremity of the yard or gaff.—Peak halliards (naut.), the ropes or tackles by which the outer end of a gaff is hoisted.—Peak down-hauler, a rope rove through a block, at the peak or outer end of a gaff, to haul it down by.—Peak purchase, a tackle on the peak tie for hoisting it.—Peak tie, a tie used in some ships for hoisting the peak of a heavy gaff.

Peak (pēk), v.i. [Perhaps from the sharpened features of sickly persons.] 1. To look sickly or thin; to be or become emaciated.

Wear y se'nights nine times nine
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine.

2.† To make a mean figure; to sneak.—3. To peep or pry. [Vulgar.]

Peak (pēk), v.t. Naut. to raise a gaff or yard more obliquely to the mast.

Peaked (pēkt), a. Pointed; ending in a point. 'His peaked beard.' Macaulay.

Peaking (pēk'ing), a. Mean; sneaking; poor. [Vulgar.]

Peakish (pēk'ish), a. 1. Denoting or belonging to peaks of hills; having peaks; situated on a peak. [Rare.] 'Peakish Hill.' Drayton. 'His peakish dialect (that is of the Peak in Derbyshire).' Bp. Hall.—2. Having features that seem thin and sharp, as from sickness. [Colloq.]

Peaky (pēk'i), a. Consisting of peaks; resembling a peak; characterized by a peak or peaks. 'Hills with peaky tops engrail'd.' Tennyson.

Peal (pēl), n. [Probably a mutilated form of appel. Halliwell gives apel, as an old call in hunting music, consisting of three long moos.] 1. A loud sound, usually a succession of loud sounds, as of bells, thunder, cannon, shouts of a multitude, &c. 'A fair peal of artillery.' Sir J. Hayward. 'Peals of shouts.' Dryden. 'A peal of thunder.' Addison. 'With peals of genial clamour.' Tennyson.—2. A set of bells tuned to each other; the changes rung on such a set of bells.

Peal (pēl), v.t. To utter loud and solemn sounds; as, the pealing organ. 'A hundred bells began to peal.' Tennyson.

Peal (pēl), v.t. 1. To assail with noise. [Rare.]

Nor was his ear less pealed
With noises loud and ruinous. Milton.

2. To cause to ring or sound; to celebrate. J. Barlow.—3. To utter loudly and sonorously.

All that night I heard the watchman peal
The sliding seasons. Tennyson.

4.† To stir or agitate.

Pea-maggot (pē-mag-ot), n. The caterpillar of a small moth (Plutella maculipennis) which lays its eggs in peas, to which the larva is very destructive. It is common in Britain, and especially mischievous in wet seasons.

Pea (pē'an), n. See PEAN.

Pea (pēn), n. [O.Fr. panne, a skin, a fur.] In her, one of the furs borne in coat-armour, the ground of which is black, with ermine spots of gold.

[Gr. paianismos. See PEAN.] The song or shouts of praise or of battle; shouts of triumph. Mitford.

Pea-nut (pē-nut), n. The Arachis hypogaea, or ground-nut. See ARACHIS.

Pea-ore (pē'or), n. The name given to granular argillaceous oxide of iron, from its occurring in small masses or grains, nearly or quite spherical, and of the size of a pea.

Pea-pod (pē'pod), n. The pod or pericarp of the pea.

Pear (pār), n. [A. Sax. peru, which with D. peer, Dan. pære, and Fr. poire, It. and Sp. pera, is from L. pyrum, a pear.] 1. A tree of the genus Pyrus, the P. communis, growing wild in many parts of Europe and Asia, and from which the numerous cultivated varieties have originated.—2. The fruit of P. communis. Good pears are characterized by a saccharine aromatic juice, a soft and pearly liquid pulp, melting in the mouth, as in the butter-pear; or by a firm and crisp consistence, as in the winter bergamot. The pear is chiefly propagated by grafting or budding on the wild pear stock, or on stocks raised from the seeds of cultivated pears, called free stocks. It is also grafted on the quince, the medlar, and the white thorn.—Alligator pear. See AVOCADO.—Anchoy pear. See ANCHOVY-PEAR.—Prickly pear. See PRICKLY-PEAR.

Pearcht (pērcht), n. A perch (in all senses).

Pear-gauge, Pear-gage (pār'gāj), n. An instrument for measuring the degree of exhaustion of an air-pump receiver.

Pear-rifle (pār'rifl), n. A rifle of a small bore which carries a ball little or no larger than a pea.

Pearliform (pār'i-form), a. Pear-shaped.

Pearl (pērl), n. [A. Sax. pearl, which with D. paarl, parel, Ital. perla, Dan. and G. perle, Fr. perle, It. perla, is from L.L. perula, perla, a pearl. Perula is either a form of pirula, a dim. from L. pyrum, a pear, or is for pirula, a pill, a globule.] 1. A silvery or bluish-white, hard, smooth, lustrous substance, of a roundish, oval, or pear-shaped form, produced by certain species of molluscs as the result of some abnormal secretory process. The production is generally begun by the introduction of some foreign body, such as a grain of sand, or the like, within the mantle lobes. The presence of this body sets up an irritant action, resulting in the deposition of gradually increasing layers of nacreous material (the mother-of-pearl with which the inside of the shells is lined) over the offending particle. Scientifically speaking, pearl consists of carbonate of lime interstratified with animal membrane. Chief among the pearl-producing molluscs are the pearl-oyster (Melegrina margaritifera) of the Indian seas, and the unios or fresh-water mussels of our own rivers. The finest pearls are fished for and obtained in the Bay of Bengal, at Ceylon, in the Persian Gulf, &c. The Melegrina, though popularly called the pearl-oyster, does not, zoologically speaking, belong to the oyster family (Ostreidae), but is included in the Aviculidae, a nearly related group. For the pearl-mussel of our rivers see under UNIONIDE. Artificial or false pearls are made of small globules or pear-shaped spheroids of thin glass, filled with a mixture of liquid ammonia, and the pearly films of the scales of the bleak, and sometimes of the roach and the dace.—

2. Poetically, something round and clear, as a drop of water or dew. Milton.—3. A white speck or film growing on the eye; cataract. 4. A small printing letter, the smallest, except diamond and brilliant. The extended quotations in this dictionary are printed in pearl.—5. Anything very valuable; the choicest or best part; a jewel.

I see the compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds. Shak.

6. In her, the white or silver colour in the coats of barons and noblemen; otherwise called Argent.

Pearl (pērl), a. Relating to, made of pearl, or containing a pearl or pearls; as, a pearl ring.

Pearl (pērl), v.t. 1. To set or adorn with pearls.—2. To make into pearl-barley.

Pearl (pērl), v.i. To resemble pearls. Spenser. [Rare.]

Peastone (pēstōn), n. See PISOLITE.

Peat (pēt), n. [For beat or bete, from bete, to mend (a fire).] 1. A kind of turf used as fuel; vegetable matter accumulated in hollows or low situations on land not in a state of cultivation, always more or less saturated with water, and consisting of the remains, more or less decomposed, of mosses and other marsh plants. Peat is generally of a black or dark-brown colour, or when recently formed, of a yellowish brown; it is soft and of a viscid consistence, but it becomes hard and darker by exposure to the air. When thoroughly dried it burns, giving out a gentle heat without much smoke; accordingly it is used as fuel in those countries where it abounds, as in Scotland and Ireland. It contains a portion of tannin, which has the property of preserving animal and vegetable matter from decomposition.

2. A small square or rectangular piece of peat-bog or moss, cut and dried for fuel.

Peat† (pēt), n. A pet; a favourite; sometimes used as a term of contempt.

A pretty peat! 'tis best
Put finger in the eye,—an she knew why. Shak.

Pelican (pel'í-kan), n. [From L. pelicanus, Gr. pelekanos, a pelican, from pelukys, a hatchet—said to be from shape of bill.] 1. A palmpied bird of the genus Pelecanus. It is larger than the swan, has a great extent of wing, and is an excellent swimmer. Pelicans are, to a certain extent, gregarious, and frequent the neighbourhood of rivers, lakes, and the sea-coast, feeding chiefly on fish, which they capture with great adroitness. They have a very long, large, flattened bill, the upper mandible terminated by a strong hook, which curves over the tip of the lower one; beneath the lower mandible, which is composed of two flexible, bony branches meeting at the tip, a great pouch of naked skin is appended, capable of holding a considerable number of fish, and thus enabling the bird to dispose of the superfluous quantity which may be taken during fishing expeditions, either for its own consumption or for the nourishment of its young. The nail or hook which terminates the bill is red, and it is supposed that the ancient fable of the pelican feeding its young with blood from its own breast has originated from its habit of pressing the bill upon the breast in order the more easily to empty the pouch, when the red tip might be mistaken for blood. The species are found in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, though not numerous. There are two European species, P. onocrotalus and P. crispus. In

Used as a place of punishment; as, a penal settlement. — Penal action, in Scots law, an action in which the conclusions of the summons are of a penal nature; that is, when extraordinary damages, and reparation by way of penalty, are concluded for. — Penal code, a code or system of laws relating to the punishment of crimes. — Penal irritancy, in Scots law, the forfeiture of a right which incurs a penalty; as, the irritancy of a feu, which takes place by the failure to pay the feu-duty for a certain specified time. — Penal laws, those laws which prohibit an act and impose a penalty for the commission of it. — Penal servitude, a species of punishment in British criminal law introduced in 1853 in lieu of transportation, consisting in imprisonment for a series of years, varying with the magnitude of the crime, with hard labour, at any of the penal establishments in Great Britain or in any of the British dominions beyond seas. — Penal statutes, those statutes which impose penalties or punishments for an offence committed. — Penal sum, a sum declared by bond to be forfeited if the condition of the bond be not fulfilled. If the bond be for payment of money, the penal sum is generally fixed at twice the amount.

Penalty (pé-nal'ti), n. The quality or character of being penal; liahleness to punishment; criminality. Sir T. Browne. Penally (pé-nal'i), adv. In a penal manner. Penalogist (pé-nal'ô-jist), n. [Penal, and Gr. logos, discourse.] One who studies the various kinds of punishment as awarded to criminals, with the view to their reformation. Stormonth.

Penalty (pen'al-ti), n. [L. penaltis, from L. pœna. See PENAL.] 1. The suffering in person or property which is annexed by law or judicial decision to the commission of a crime, offence, or trespass as a punishment; penal retribution. — 2. The suffering to which a person subjects himself by covenant or agreement, in case of non-fulfilment of his stipulations; the forfeiture or sum to be forfeited for non-payment, or for non-compliance with an agreement; as, the penalty stipulated in a bond. 'The penalty and forfeit of my bond.' Shak. — 3. Money recoverable by virtue of a penal statute; a fine; a mulct. — Pains and penalties. See under PAIN.

Penance (pen'ans), n. [O.Fr. penance, penance, O.it. penanza, from L. pœnitentia, repentance, regret, from pœna, pain, punishment, expiation.] 1. An ecclesiastical censure or punishment imposed by the ecclesiastical law for the purgation or correction of the soul of an offender; or the suffering to which a person voluntarily subjects himself as an expression of penitence, such as fasting, flagellation, wearing chains, hair shirts, &c. In the R. Cath. Ch. penance is one of the sacraments, and implies contrition, confession, and satisfaction, and is followed by absolution.

They have conceived the rule of the Almighty to be like the rule of one of themselves. They have fancied that they could bribe or appease Him—tempt Him by penance or pious offering to suspend or turn aside his displeasure. Froude.

2.† Repentance.

Penance is a turning from sin unto God, a waking up from this sleep, of which St. Paul speaketh here. Lattimer.

3.† Pain; sorrow. 'Thraldom to our bodies and penance.' Chaucer.

Penanced (pen'ant), a. Having suffered penance; condemned to undergo penance.

She seemed at once some penanced lady elf,
Some demon's mistress, or the demon's self. Keats.

Penanceless (pen'ans-les), a. Free from penance; not having undergone penance.

Pen-and-ink (pen-and-ingk), a. 1. Literary; in writing. 'The last blow struck in the pen-and-ink war.' Crake. — 2. Applied to a drawing, sketch, or outline made with a pen and ink.

In ceilings of this kind, as will be seen from the cut, the ribs of the vaults become united at the impost of each pendentive.—Pendentive bracketing, the coved bracketing springing from the wall of a rectangular area in an upward direction so as to form the horizontal plane into a complete circle or ellipse.—Pendentive cradling, the timber work for sustaining the lath and plaster in pendentives.

Pendently (pen'dent-ly), adv. In a pendent or projecting manner.

Pendicet (pen'dis), n. 1. A sloping roof; a pentice.—2. A pent-house. Fairfax.

Pendicle (pen'di-kl), n. [From L. pendeo, to hang down.] 1. A pendant; an appendage. 2. [Scotch.] (a) A small piece of ground, either depending on a larger farm or let separately by the owner; a croft. (b) One church dependent on another. (c) An inferior member of certain trades incorporations.

Pendicler (pen'di-klér), n. One who cultivates a pendicle or croft; an inferior or small tenant. [Scotch.]

Pending (pend'ing), p. and a. [L. pendeo, to hang.] Depending; remaining undecided; not terminated; as, a pending suit. Pending (pend'ing), prep. For the time of the continuance of; during; as, pending the suit; pending the negotiation.

Its tenant still remained in possession, pending the commencement of active building operations. Dickens.

Pendragon (pen-dra'gon), n. [W. pen, a head, and dragon, a leader.] A chief leader; a generalissimo; a chief king. The title was anciently conferred on British chiefs in times of great danger, when they were invested with dictatorial power. 'The dread pendragon, Britain's king of kings,' Tennyson.

Pendragonship (pen-dra-ghon-ship), n. The state, condition, or power of a pendragon. Tennyson.

Pendro (pen'drô), n. A disease in sheep.

Pendule (pen'dul), n. A pendulum. Everlyn.

Pendulosity† (pen-dû-lo'si-ti), n. The state of being pendulous; hanging; suspension. Sir T. Browne.

Pendulous (pen'dû-lus), a. [L. pendulus, from pendeo, to hang.] 1. Supported from a fixed point above; hanging so as to swing freely; loosely pendent; hanging; swinging. 'The pendulous skirts of these aerial curtains,' De Quincey.—2. Swinging from one side to another; doubtful; wavering. 'A pendulous state of mind,' Atterbury.

Pendulousness (pen'dû-lus-nes), n. The state of being pendulous, or hanging and swinging.

Pendulum (pen'dû-lum), n. [Lit. what hangs down, from L. pendulus, hanging down, from pendeo, to hang. See PENDANT.] A body so suspended from a fixed point as to move to and fro by the alternate action of gravity and momentum. The time occupied by each oscillation or swing is counted from the time of the descent of the pendulum from the highest point on one side till it attains the highest point on the opposite side. The point A, about which the pendulum A B moves, is called the point of suspension or centre of motion, the line CD, parallel to the horizon, is the axis of oscillation, and the arc B B' is called the arc of vibration. Pendulums receive different denominations, according to the materials of which they are composed, or the purposes they are intended to answer. A single weight attached by a string, &c., is called a simple pendulum; but the common clock pendulum usually consists of a rod of metal or wood, suspended so as to move freely about the point of suspension, and having a flat circular piece of brass or other heavy material called a bob attached to its lower end. The metal rod, however, is subject to variations in length in consequence of changes of temperature, and as the accuracy of the pendulum considered as a regulating power depends upon its always maintaining the same length, various contrivances, under the name of compensation pendulums, have been adopted in order to counteract the effects of changes of temperature. These take particular names, according to their forms and materials, as the gridiron pendulum, the mercurial pendulum, the lever pendulum, &c. The gridiron pendulum is composed of any odd number of rods, so connected that the expansion or contraction of the one set of them is counteracted by that of the other. The mercurial pendulum consists of one rod with a vessel containing mercury at the lower end, so adjusted in quantity that whatever alterations take place in the length of the pendulum, the centre of oscillation remains the same, the mercury ascending when the rod descends, and vice versa. The pendulum is of great importance as the regulating power of clocks. Our clocks are nothing more than pendulums, with wheel-work attached to register the number of vibrations, and with a weight or spring having force enough to counteract retarding effects of friction and the resistance of the air, and when the pendulum is so adjusted as to beat or vibrate $60 \times 60 = 3600$ times in an hour, it is called a seconds pendulum. The length of such a pendulum in the latitude of London, and at the level of the sea, is $39\frac{1}{2}$ inches nearly, or more accurately 39.1333 inches; but as the force of gravity diminishes towards the equator and increases towards the poles, owing to the figure of the earth, the seconds pendulum must be shortened in lower latitudes and lengthened in higher. The length of a pendulum is the distance between the point of suspension and the centre of oscillation. (See CENTRE.) Besides its use as a regulator of clocks, the pendulum is applied to determine the relative force of gravity at different places, and also to determine the exact figure of the earth.

Peneian (pe-ni'an), a. Of or pertaining to the river Peneius, which runs through the Vale of Tempe in Thessaly. 'The long divine Peneian pass,' Tennyson.

Penelope (pê-nel'ô-pe), n. A genus of gallinaceous birds inhabiting the New World. P. cristata (the guan) is found in a wild state in Guiana and Brazil, and resembles the curassows both in appearance and habits. Its length is about 30 inches, the tail measuring 13 or 14 inches. The upper parts of the body are dusky black or bronze, glossed with green, a black stripe passing from the under part of the bill backwards and surrounding the ear; the fore part of the neck and breast are spotted with white, and the belly, legs, lower part of the back, and tail-coverts, are reddish.

Penetrability (pen'e-tra-bil'i-ti), n. Susceptibility of being penetrated, or of being entered or passed through by another body. 'There being no mean between penetrability and impenetrability,' Cheyne.

Penetrable (pen'e-tra-bl), a. [Fr. pénétrable, L. penetrabilis. See PENETRATE.] 1. Capable of being penetrated, entered, or pierced by another body. Let him try (for that's allowed) thy dart, And pierce his only penetrable part. Dryden.

2. Susceptible of moral or intellectual impression. I am not made of stone, But penetrable to your kind entreaties. Shak.

Penetrableness (pen'e-tra-bl-nes), n. State of being penetrable; penetrability. Penetrably (pen'e-tra-bl), adv. In a penetrable manner; so as to be penetrable.

Penetrall† (pen'e-tral), n. [L. penetrallia, interior.] Interior parts. Harvey.

Penetralla (pen'e-tral'i-a), n pl. [L., from penetralls, penetrating, internal. See PENETRATE.] 1. The interior parts of anything; specifically, the inner parts of a building, as a temple or palace; a sanctuary, especially the sanctuary of the Penates.—2. Hidden things; secrets.

Penetrance (pen'e-trans), n. Same as Penetrancy.

Penetrancy (pen'e-tran-si), n. [L. penetrans.] The quality of being penetrant; power of entering or piercing.

The subtilty, activity, and penetrancy of its effluvia no obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray.

Penetrant (pen'e-trant), a. Having the power to penetrate or pierce; making way inwards; subtle. 'Food . . . subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant,' Ray. 'Penetrant and powerful arguments,' Boyle.

Penetrate (pen'e-trât), v t. pret. & pp. penetrated; ppr. penetrating. [L. penetrare, penetratum, to penetrate; root pen, expressing the idea of entering, whence L. penitus, inward, penetrallia, inward parts, Penates, &c.] 1. To enter or pierce; to make way into the interior of; as, a sword or dart penetrates the body; oil penetrates wood.—2. To pass into or affect the mind of; to cause to feel; to make sensible; to touch; as, I am penetrated with a lively sense of your generosity. 'Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire,' Shak.—3. To pierce into by the intellect; to arrive at the inner contents or meaning of; to understand; as, to penetrate the meaning or design of anything.

Penetrate (pen'e-trät), v.t. 1. To enter into or pierce anything; to pass; to make way. 'Born where heaven's influence scarce can penetrate.' Pope.—2. To see into something intellectually.

Penetrating (pen'e-trät-ing), p. and a. 1. Having the power of entering or piercing another body; sharp; subtle; as, oil is a penetrating substance.—2. Acute; discerning; quick to understand; as, a penetrating mind. 'Men of the largest sense, of the most penetrating insight.' Craik.

Penetratingly (pen'e-trät-ing-li), adv. In a penetrating manner; piercingly; discerningly; acutely. Wright.

Penetration (pen'e-trä-shon), n. 1. The act of penetrating or entering a body; the entry of one solid body into another by means of force.—2. A seeing into something obscure or difficult; as, a penetration into the difficulties of algebra. Watts.—3. Discernment; mental acuteness; sagacity; as, a man of great or nice penetration. Sterne.—SYN. Acuteness, sagacity, sagaciousness, sharpness, discernment, discrimination.

Penetrative (pen'e-trät-iv), a. 1. Piercing; sharp; subtle.

Let not air be too gross nor too penetrative. Wotton.

2. Acute; sagacious; discerning. 'Penetrative wisdom.' Swift.—3. Having the power to affect or impress the mind. 'Penetrative shame.' Shak.

Penetrativeness (pen'e-trät-iv-nes), n. The quality of being penetrative.

Pen-fish (pen'fish), n. Same as Calamary.

Penfold (pen'fôld), n. Same as Pinfold.

Penguin (pen'gwin), n. [Also spelled pinguin, and probably a corruption of penwing or pinwing, provincial terms for the plover or outer joint of the wing of a fowl, so that the name meant originally a bird that had undergone the operation of pinioning or pinwinging, that is, having the outer joint of the wing removed, or the quills plucked out. Prov. E. pin-wing, is equivalent to pen-wing or the part of the wing that carries the pens or quills. The name seems to have been originally given to the great auk from its rudimentary wings, being afterwards transferred to the penguins.] 1. A common name for natorial or swimming birds of the genus Aptenodytes, family Aptenodytidae or Spheniscidae, allied to the auks and guillemots. The wings are rudimentary, destitute of quill-feathers, and covered with a scaly skin; they are useless as organs of flight, but are effective aids in diving and swimming, and on land are often used in the manner of fore-legs. The legs are placed at the hinder extremity of the body, and the birds assume an erect attitude when on land; the toes are completely webbed. The body is covered with short close-set feathers; the neck is moderately long; the head small; the bill of moderate length; the tail short. There are many species, which inhabit chiefly high southern latitudes, congregating sometimes in colonies of from 50,000 to 40,000. They lay but a single egg and make no nest. The young are considered good eating. Cuttle-fish and other Cephalopoda form a great part of their food. The king penguin (Aptenodytes patagonica), shown above, is a rather large bird, being about 3 feet in length.—2. A species of West Indian fruit, whose sharp acid juice is sometimes put into punch and also converted into a kind of wine.

Penguinery (pen-gwin'ë-ri), n. A colony of penguins. Fitzroy.

Pen-gun (pen'gun), n. A pop-gun. [Scotch.]

Penholder (pen'hôld-ër), n. The stalk and attached appliance for holding pen-points.

Penhouse (pen'hous), n. An out-building; a shed; a penhouse.

Penible, a. [Fr.] 1. Industrious; pains-taking. Chaucer.—2. Painful. Lydgate.

Penicil (pen'isil), n. [L. penicillus. See PENCIL.] A tent or pledget for wounds or ulcers.

Penicillate, Penicillated (pen-i-sil'at, pen-i-sil'at-ed), a. [L. penicillus, a pencil or small brush.] In bot. having the form of a pencil; consisting of a bundle of short, compact, or close fibres. In zool. a term applied to a part that supports one or more small bundles of diverging hairs.

Penicillium (pen-i-sil'i-um), n. [From L. penicillum, a painter's pencil, alluding to the form of the filaments.] A genus of fungous plants found on decaying bodies and in fluids in a state of acetification. P. glaucum is the ultimate state both of the vinegar-plant, the flocculent filaments of which form a close, tough, crust-like, or leathery web, and also of the yeast-plant, called in its first stage Torula cerevisiae.

Peninsula (pe-nin'sü-lä), n. [L. pen, almost, and insula, an island.] A portion of land almost surrounded by water, and connected with the mainland by a narrow neck or isthmus. This term when preceded by the definite article is frequently applied to Spain and Portugal.

Peninsular (pe-nin'sü-lär), a. In the form or state of a peninsula; pertaining to a peninsula; inhabiting a peninsula.—Peninsular war, the contest which was maintained in the beginning of the present century in Spain and Portugal by the British and native forces against the French.

Peninsulate (pe-nin'sü-lät), v.t. pret. & pp. peninsulated; ppr. peninsulating. To encompass almost with water; to form into a peninsula.

South River peninsulates Castle Hill farm, and at high tides surrounds it. Bentley.

Penis (pé'nis), n. [L.] The male organ of generation.

Peniston (pen'i-ston), n. Same as Pennistone.

Penitence (pen'i-tens), n. [Fr. penitence, from L. penitentia, from peniteo, to repent, from pena, punishment, retribution; whence pain, penal, punish. Penance is a different form of the same word.] The state of being penitent; sorrow for the commission of sin or offences; repentance; contrition.

By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeased. Shak.
SYN. Repentance, contrition, compunction, remorse.

Penitencer (pen'i-ten-sér), n. A priest who enjoins penance in extraordinary cases. Chaucer.

Penitency (pen'i-ten-si), n. Penitence.

Penitent (pen'i-ten-t), a. [L. penitens, repenting, repentant. See PENITENCE.] 1. Suffering pain or sorrow of heart on account of sins, crimes, or offences; contrite; sincerely affected by a sense of guilt, and resolving on amendment of life.

The proud he tam'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd. Dryden.

2. † Doing penance; suffering. Shak.
But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent for your default to-day. Shak.

Penitent (pen'i-ten-t), n. 1. One who repents of sin; one sorrowful on account of his transgressions. 'I'll play the penitent.' Shak.—2. One under church censure, but admitted to penance. Stillington.—3. One under the direction of a confessor.—Penitents is an appellation given to certain fraternities in Catholic countries, distinguished by their habits and employed in charitable acts.—Order of Penitents, a religious order established by one Bernard of Marseilles, about the year 1272, for the reception of reformed courtiers. The Congregation of Penitents at Paris was founded with a similar view.

Penitential (pen-i-ten'shal), a. [Fr. penitential. See PENITENT.] Pertaining to, proceeding from, or expressing penitence or contrition of heart; as, penitential sorrow or tears.—Penitential psalms, the psalms numbered vi., xxiii., xxxviii., li., cii., cxxx., cxlii. of the authorized version of the Bible, or vi., xxi., xxxvii., l., ci., cxix., cxlii. of the Vulgate.

Penitential (pen-i-ten'shal), n. 1. In the R. Cath. Ch. a book containing the rules which relate to penance and the reconciliation of penitents.—2. † A vagabond who has been subjected to the punishment of whipping. Hudibras.

Penitentially (pen-i-ten'shal-li), adv. In a penitential or contrite manner.

Penitentiary (pen-i-ten'sha-ri), a. 1. Relating to penance, or to the rules and measures of penance.—2. Expressive of contrition or penitence; as, a penitentiary letter.

Penitentiary (pen-i-ten'sha-ri), n. 1. One that prescribes the rules and measures of penance. Bacon; Ayliffe.—2. A penitent; one that does penance. 'To forsake the world and turn penitentiaries.' Hammond.—3. At the court of Rome, an office in which are examined and delivered out the secret bulls, graces, or dispensations relating to cases of conscience, confession, &c.—4. An officer in some Roman Catholic cathedrals, vested with power from the bishop to absolve in cases reserved to him. The pope has a grand penitentiary, who is a cardinal and is chief of the other penitentiaries.—5. In monastic establishments, a small building in which a penitent confined himself. The term was also applied to that part of a church to which penitents were admitted during divine service.—6. An institution for the reformation of prostitutes.—7. A house of correction in which offenders are confined for punishment and reformation and compelled to labour.

Penitentiaryship (pen-i-ten'sha-ri-ship), n. The office of a penitentiary.

Penitently (pen'i-ten-ti), adv. In a penitent manner; with penitence; with repentance, sorrow, or contrition for sin. Shak; Ep. Hall.

Penk (penk), n. A minnow. Iz. Walton.

Penknife (pen'nif), n. A small pocket-knife, so called from its former use in making and mending quill-pens.

Penman (pen'man), n. pl. Penmen (pen'men). 1. A man who professes or teaches the art of writing.—2. One who writes a good hand; a calligrapher.—3. An author; a writer; as, the sacred penmen. 'The penmen of them, not prophets, but evangelists.' South.

Penmanship (pen'man-ship), n. 1. The use of the pen in writing; the art of writing.—2. Manner of writing; as, good or bad penmanship.

Pennachied (pen-nasht'), a. [Fr. pennaché, panaché, variegated, from panache, a plume of feathers, from L. penna, a feather.] Diversified with natural stripes of various colours, as a flower.

Carefully protect from violent rain your pennachied tulips, covering them with mattresses. Evelyn.

Pennage (pen'aj), n. [From L. penna, a feather.] Plumage. Holland.

Pennal (pen'al), n. [Lit. a pen-case, from L. penna, a pen.] A name formerly given to the freshmen of the Protestant universities of Germany who were the fags of the elder students or scholars.

Pennalism (pen'al-izm), n. A system of fagging once practised by the elder students on the freshmen in German Protestant universities. Pennalism was abolished in the latter end of the seventeenth century.

Pen-name (pen'näm), n. A name assumed by an author who wishes to conceal his real name; a nom de plume. Bayard Taylor.

Pennant (pen'ant), n. [Corrupted from pendant, a flag; or same as pennon, Fr. pennon, a small flag, with a redundant t, as in tyrant.] 1. A small flag; a pennon; specifically, a long narrow piece of bunting carried at the mast-head of a ship of war. See PENDANT.—2. Naut. a tackle for hoisting goods on board a ship.

Pennate, Pennated (pen'at, pen'at-ed), a. [L. pennatus, winged, from penna, a feather.] In bot. same as Pinnate.

Pennatula (pen-nat'u-lä), n. [Mod. L. pennatula, a little pen, from penna, a feather, a pen.] A genus of celerataes, family Pennatulidae, and order Alcyonaria, having a calcareous axis or stem, with a double set of branches extending in the same plane from both sides, like the vane of a quill; the sea-pens. These animals float in the waters of the sea or root in the sand.

Pennatulidæ (pen-na-tu'i-lî-dê), n. pl. A family of Celerata, class Actinozoa, and order Alcyonaria, of which the sea-pen (Pennatula) is the type.

Penne (pen), n. [See PEN.] A feather. Spenser.

Penner (pen'ër), n. 1. A writer.—2. A pen-case. [Local.]

Penniform (pen'i-form), a. [L. penna, a feather or quill, and forma, form.] Having the form of a quill or feather; resembling a feather in form; in anat. a term applied to muscles in which the fibres pass obliquely outwards on either side from a tendinous centre.

Pennigerous (pen-nij'er-us), a. [L. penna, a feather, and gero, to bear.] Bearing feathers or quills. Kirby.

Penniless (pen'ni-less), a. [From penny.] Moneyless; destitute of money; poor. 'Hungering, penniless, and far from home.' Cowper.

Pennilessness (pen'ni-less-ness), n. The state of being penniless or without money.

Penninerved (pen'ni-nérvd), a. [L. penna, a feather, and ē. nervd.] In bot. a term applied to leaves with a midrib branched on either side.

Pennistone (pen'ni-stón), n. [From the village of Pennistone in Yorkshire.] A coarse woollen stuff or frieze.

Pennon† (pen'on), n. A pinion. 'Fluttering his pennons vain.' Milton.

Pennon (pen'on), n. [Fr. pennon, a pennon, which Litré and Brachet derive from L. penna, a feather, and plume, a wing, and in late Latin, a pen.] A small pointed flag or streamer formerly carried by knights attached to their spear or lance, and generally bearing a badge or device; a pennant.

Pennoncel, Pennoncelle (pen'on-sel), n. [Dim. of pennon.] A small pennon; a little flag to ornament a lance or spear.

Penny (pen'ni), n. pl. Pennies or Pence (pen'ni, pens). Pennies denotes the number of coins; pence the amount of pennies in value.

[A Sax. penig, pening, a penny, a silver coin, a pound weight; a word which appears to have been borrowed into the Teutonic languages at a very early date, and considered by Pott and others to be probably of same origin as pawn, a pledge or earnest of a bargain: D. penning, Dan. penge, a coin, money; Icel. penningur, a coin, a part of an ounce; O.H.G. pending, G. pfennig.] 1. A bronze (formerly copper) coin, of which there are 12 in the shilling and 240 in the pound sterling. It is the radical denomination from which our coins are numbered, the halfpenny and farthing being fractions of a penny. In Scotland the value of the old penny was only $\frac{1}{2}$ d. sterling, the pound being equal to 20d. sterling.—2. An insignificant coin or value; a small sum. 'I will not tell thee a penny.' Shak.—3. Money in general; as, a cheap pennyworth. 'What penny hath Rome borne, what men provided.' Shak. Often in such phrases as to turn an honest penny, to make a little gain honestly. Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden.

In the phrases six-penny, eight-penny, ten-penny nails, nails of such sizes that a thousand will weigh six, eight, or ten pounds, penny retains its old meaning of pound weight. See NAIL, in meaning 2.

Penny-a-liner (pen'ni-a-lin-er), n. A term of contempt for those who furnish matter for public journals at a penny a line, or some such small price. The penny-a-liners prepare paragraphs on their own account, and sell copies of the same paragraph to as many journals as will purchase them. Hence, any poor writer for hire.

Penny-cress (pen'ni-kres), n. A cruciferous British plant of the genus Thlaspi, the T. arvense, called also Mithridate Mustard. It grows to the height of from 10 to 12 inches, has bright green oblong leaves, which are toothed, and at the base arrow-shaped; the slender stems bear numerous minute white flowers, which are succeeded by very large orbicular pouches, rendering the plant conspicuous. It occurs as a weed in cornfields.

Penny-dog (pen'ni-dog), n. A kind of shark common on the south coast of Britain; the tope.

Penny-father† (pen'ni-fā-thér), n. A parsimonious or penurious person; a niggard. Sir T. More.

Penny-gaff (pen'ni-gaf), n. A theatre of a very low class, for admission to which a penny or some such low sum is charged.

Penny-grass (pen'ni-gras), n. A plant, pennyroyal (which see).

Pennyroyal (pen'ni-roi-al), n. A British plant of the genus Mentha, the M. Pulegium, a trailing plant, with small smooth, ovate leaves. Its odour is less pungent than that of the other species, but it is used for the same purposes. The North American pennyroyal is the Hedeoma pterigoides.

Penny-wedding (pen'ni-wed-ing), n. A wedding where the guests contribute toward the expenses of the wedding entertainment, and frequently towards the household outfit of the wedded pair. 'A sort of penny-wedding... where all men contribute to the young folk's maintenance.' Sir W. Scott.

Pennyweight (pen'ni-wät), n. A troy weight containing 24 grains, each grain being equal in weight to a grain of wheat from the middle of the ear, well dried. It was anciently the weight of a silver penny, whence the name. Twenty pennyweights make an ounce troy.

Penny-wise (pen'ni-wiz), a. Saving small sums at the hazard of larger; niggardly on unimportant occasions; generally used in the full phrase 'penny-wise and pound-foolish.'

Be not penny-wise; riches have wings and fly away of themselves. Bacon.

Pennyworth (pen'ni-wérth), n. 1. As much as is bought for a penny.—2. Any purchase; anything bought or sold for money; a bargain. 'Though the pennyworth on his side be the worst.' Shak.

Though in purchase of church lands men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.

3. A good bargain; something advantageously purchased, or for less than it is worth.

4. A small quantity.

My friendship I distribute in pennyworths to those about me. Swift.

Penock (pen'ok), n. A name given to oikake in the East. Called also Pend.

Penological (pé-no-loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to penology; pertaining to public punishment.

Penology (pé-no-lo'ji), n. [Gr. poínē, L. pœna, retribution, punishment, and logos, discourse.] The science which treats of public punishments, as they respect the public and the sufferer.

Penon†, n. A pennon. Chaucer.

Penrack (pen'trak), n. A rack for holding pens when not in use.

Pens†, n. pl. Pence; pennies. Chaucer.

Pensa†, n. [L.] A way of cheese, salt, &c., equal to 256 lbs.

Pensative† (pen'sa-tiv), a. Same as Pensive. Shelton.

Pensell†, n. See PENCEL. Chaucer.

Pensible† (pen'si-bl), a. Capable of being weighed; pensile. Bacon.

Pensifehead†, n. Pensiveness. Chaucer.

Pensil (pen'sil), n. A pencil (which see).

Pensils and pennons were flung, To heaven the Border slogan rung, 'St. Mary for the young Buccleuch!' Sir W. Scott.

Pensile (pen'sil), a. [L. pensilis, from pendeo, to hang.] Hanging; suspended; hanging and swaying; pendulous. 'The bell when it is pensile.' Bacon. 'The long, pensile branches of the birches.' Hovatt.

Pensileness (pen'sil-ness), n. The state of being pensile or hanging. 'The pensileness of the earth.' Bacon.

Pensility† (pen'sil'i-ti), n. The state of hanging loosely; pensileness. Bacon.

Pension (pen'shon), n. [Fr. pension, from L. pensio, pensionis, a paying, a payment, from pendo, pensum, to weigh, to pay (whence expensd, &c.), allied to pendeo, to hang (whence pendent, &c.)] 1. A stated allowance to a person in consideration of past services; periodical payment made to a person retired from service on account of age, disability, or the like; especially, a yearly sum granted by government to retired public officers, to soldiers or sailors who have served a certain number of years or have been wounded, to the families of soldiers or sailors killed, to meritorious authors, artists, and the like.

'Tis no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shak.

Peptic (pép/tík), a. [G. peptikos, from pepto, to digest.] 1. Promoting digestion; relating to digestion; dietetic; as, peptic precepts.—2. Able to digest; possessing good powers of digestion. 'Living pabulum, tolerably nutritive for a mind as yet so peptic.' Carlyle.

Peptic (pép/tík), n. A medicine which promotes digestion.

Peptics (pép/tiks), n. 1. The science or doctrine of digestion.—2. As a plural, the digestive organs.

But tho' the port surpasses praise,
My nerves have dealt with stiffer.
Is there some magic in the place?
Or do my peptics differ. Tennyson.

Per (pér). A Latin preposition, denoting through, by, by means of, for, passing through, or over the whole extent, occurring as a prefix in many English words, and also used separately in certain phrases. As a prefix, in English, it retains generally more or less of its original signification, and often intensifies the meaning of through into thoroughly or completely. Thus, in chem. a peroxide is a substance containing an unusual or thorough quantity of oxygen, a maximum of oxygen; as distinguished from protoxide, or a substance combined with oxygen in the first degree. In some cases it seems to be the analogue of the English for and German per, as in perjure, to forswear, perfidy, &c. Per is used separately for by, by the instrumentality of, as, per bearer, by the bearer; and also to signify for each; as, a shilling per day, a shilling for each day.—Per annum, by the year; in each year; annually.—Per capita, in law, by the head or poll, applied to succession when two or more persons have equal right.—Per centum, by the hundred; commonly abbreviated to per cent.—Per curiam, in law, by the court.—Per diem, by the day; in each day; daily.—Per my et per tout, in law, by the half and by all, applied to occupancy in joint-tenancy.—Per pais, in law, by the country, that is, by a jury.—Per pares, in law, by one's equals or peers.—Per saltum, by a leap; without intermediate steps.—Per se, by himself, herself, or itself; abstractly.—Per stirpes, in law, by families; applied to succession when divided among branches of representatives according to the shares which belonged to their respective ancestors.

Peract (pér-akt), v.t. [L. perago, to lead or conduct through.] To perform; to practise.

Peramelidæ (pér-a-mel'i-dæ), n. pl. The bandicoots, a family of Australian marsupials, which appear to fill the place of the hedgehogs, shrew-mice, and other small insectivora of the Eastern Continent. The hind limbs are considerably longer than the fore limbs, and their progression is therefore by a series of bounds. The molars are cuspidate, and canines are present. The fore limbs have really five toes each, but only the central three of these are well developed. The three functional toes are armed with long strong claws, with which the bandicoots burrow with great ease. The marsupial pouch opens, in some forms of the group, backwards instead of forwards. The most common species (Perameles nasuta), the long-nosed bandicoot, measures about 1½ foot from the tip of the snout to the origin of the tail, and in general appearance bears a considerable resemblance to a large overgrown rat. The name 'bandicoot' properly belongs to the great rat (Mus giganteus). See BANDICOOT.

Per annum (pér an'num). [L.] See under PER.

Perbend (pér'bend), n. See PERPEND.

Perca (pér'ka), n. [L., a perch.] The perch, a Linnean genus of acanthopterygious fishes, of numerous species. By Cuvier and modern naturalists this genus is broken up into numerous genera, the name being retained for a few species, of which our perch is a typical example.

Per-carburetted (pér-kär-bü-ret-ed), a. In chem. combined with a maximum of carbon. See PER.

Perceat (pér-käs), adv. [Per and case, by case.] Perhaps; perchance. 'Though percase it will be more strong by glory and fame.' Bacon.

Perceable (pér-sa-bl), a. Pierceable. Spenser.

Perceant† (pér'se-ant), a. [Fr. perçant, sharp, piercing.] Piercing; penetrating. Spenser.

Perceivable (pér-sév-a-bl), a. [See PERCEIVE.] 1. Perceptible; capable of being perceived; capable of falling under perception or the cognizance of the senses.—2. Capable of being known or understood.

Jupiter made all things, and all things whatsoever exist are the works of Jupiter; rivers and earth, and sea, and heaven, and what are between these, and gods, and men, and all animals, whatsoever is perceivable either by sense or by the mind. Cicero.

Perceivably (pér-sév-a-bl), adv. In a perceivable manner; perceptibly.

Perceiveance† (pér-sév-ans), n. Power of perceiving; perception. Milton.

Perceive (pér-sév), v.t. pret. & pp. perceived; ppr. perceiving. [Fr. percevoir, L. percipio, to take hold of, to feel, to perceive, to comprehend—per, and capio, to take.]

1. To have or obtain knowledge of by the senses; to apprehend or take cognizance of by the organs of sense. (See PERCEPTION.) 'Do you perceive the gastness of her eye.' Shak.

A man far off might well perceive, . . . The hard earth shake, and a low thunder of arms. Tennyson.

Seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, and touching or feeling, are words that express the operations proper to each sense; perceiving expresses that which is common to them all.

2. To apprehend by the mind without the intervention of the senses; to discern; to know; to understand. 'But Jesus perceived their wickedness.' Mat. xxii. 18. 'Who perceiveth our natural arts too dull.' Shak.

Till we ourselves see it with our own eyes, and perceive it by our own understanding, we are in the dark. Locke.

3. † To see through; to have a thorough insight into.

The king in this perceives him, how he coasts and hedges his own way. Shak.

4. † To be affected by; to receive impressions from.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air below. Bacon.

—See, Perceive, Observe. See under SEE. SYN. To discern, distinguish, observe, see, feel, know, understand.

Percentage (pér-sép-táj), n. [From the Latin per centum, per cent.] In com. the allowance, duty, rate of interest, or commission on a hundred.

Percept (pér'sept), n. That which is perceived.

—Jon (a form expressing action or an active faculty): 'perception,' 'conception,' 'imagination,' 'deduction,' 'approbation.' Some of these words express also the result of the action, thereby causing ambiguity on very important questions. Hence the introduction of the forms 'percept,' 'concept,' 'exhibit,' to express the things perceived, conceived, or exhibited, and to save circumlocution. Prof. Bain.

Perceptibility (pér-sép-tí-bil'i-ti), n. The state or quality of being perceptible; as, the perceptibility of light or colour.—2. Perception; power of perceiving.

The illumination is not so bright and fulgent as to obscure or extinguish all perceptibility of the reason. Dr. H. More.

Perceptible (pér-sép-tí-bl), a. [Fr., from L. percipio, perceptus, to take up wholly, seize, occupy.] Capable of being perceived; capable of coming under the cognizance of the senses; perceivable. 'An entity, whether perceptible or inferential, is either real or fictitious.' Bentham.

Perceptibly (pér-sép-tí-bl), adv. In a perceptible manner; visibly.

The woman decays perceptibly every week. Pope.

Perception (pér-sép'shon), n. [L. percipio, perceptionis. See PERCEIVE.] 1. The act of perceiving or of receiving impressions by the senses; or, in a wider sense, that act or process of the mind which makes us aware of any fact or truth; what results in our minds when we perceive; cognition; consciousness; apprehension; discernment; as, perception of the truth of evidence, of the difference between two courses of conduct, &c.—2. In philos. the word has been differently used by different writers (as appears from the quotations); it is now most commonly applied to the gaining of knowledge by means of the senses; knowledge gained directly of external objects; the faculty or peculiar part of man's constitution, by which he has knowledge through the medium or instrumentality of the bodily organs, or by which he holds communication with the external world, sometimes distinctively called sense-perception. In this sense it differs from consciousness in that it takes cognizance only of objects without the mind. We perceive a man, a horse, a tree; when we think or feel, we are conscious of our thoughts and emotions.

The power of perception is that we call the understanding; perception, which we make the act of the understanding, is three sorts: 1. The perception of ideas in our own minds. 2. The perception of the signification of signs. 3. The perception of the agreement or disagreement of any distinct ideas.

Perception is that act of the mind, or rather a passion or impression, whereby the mind becomes conscious of anything; as when I feel hunger, thirst, cold, or heat.

Perception is most properly applied to the evidence which we have of external objects by our senses.

3.† Notion; idea.

By the inventors, and their followers that would seem not to come too short of the perceptions of the leaders, they are magnified.

Perceptive (pér-sép'tiv), a. Of or relating to the act or power of perceiving; having the faculty of perceiving. 'The perceptive part of the soul.' Dr. H. More.

Perceptivity (pér-sép'tiv-iti), n. The quality of being perceptive; the power of perception or thinking.

When the body is quite wearied out, consciousness and perceptivity do not leave the soul. A. Baxter.

Perch (pérch), n. [Fr. perche, L. perca, Gr. perke, the perch, from perkos, dark-coloured; so called from its dusky colour.] The popular name of several species of acanthopterygious fishes of the genus Perca. They have powerful dorsal fins, with strong and sharp spines. The common perch (P. fluviatilis) is to be found in clear rivers and lakes throughout nearly the whole of the temperate parts of Europe. It is extremely voracious, and very tenacious of life. Its flesh is firm and delicate.

Perch (Perca fluviatilis).

Perch (pérch), n. [Fr. perche, It. pertica, from L. pertica, a pole, a staff.] 1. A pole; hence, a roost for birds; also, anything on which they light. Hence—2. An elevated seat or position.

Perenchyma (pe-ren'ki-ma), n. [Gr. péra, a sac, and enchyma, infusion.] In bot. a term sometimes applied to cellular tissue containing starch.

Perendure (per-en-dûr'), v.i. [L. per, through, and E. endure.] To last or endure for ever, or for a long time. 'Perenduring Rome.' Ency. Brit.

Perennial (per-en-i-al), a. [L. perennis—per, through, and annus, a year.] 1. Lasting or continuing without cessation through the year; as, a perennial spring or fountain. 2. Continuing without stop or intermission; perpetual; unceasing; never-failing.

There is a perennial nobleness, and even sacredness in work. Carlyle.

3. In bot. continuing more than two years; as, a perennial stem or root.—SYN. Perpetual, unceasing, never-failing, unfailling, ceaseless, constant, enduring, permanent, uninterrupted, continual.

Perennial (per-en-i-al), n. In bot. a plant whose root remains alive more years than two, but whose stems flower and perish annually. Perennials have herbaceous stems; they differ from annuals and biennials, not only in the time of their duration, but also in this, that the two former perish as soon as they have flowered, whereas the latter may continue to send forth herbaceous stems which annually flourish and decay, while the root lives for several years; as the asparagus, asphodels, and lucern. The division of plants, however, into annuals, biennials, and perennials, according to the duration of their roots, is liable to vary under the influence of different circumstances. An annual plant in a northern climate may become a biennial or perennial in a warm climate, while, on the other hand, the perennials of warm climates often become annuals when transplanted into northern climates.

Perennially (per-en-i-al-ly), adv. So as to be perennial; continually; without ceasing.

Perennibranchiata (per-en-ni-brang'ki-â'ta), n. pl. A section of amphibians of the nat. order Urodela, in which the branchiae or gills are permanently retained. It is represented by the singular Proteus anguinus, inhabiting pools in caves of Illyria and Dalmatia, by the siren or mud-eel abundant in the rice swamps of South Carolina, and by the menobranchus of North America. The Mexican axolotl is ordinarily perennibranchiate, but individual specimens have been known to lose their gills.

Perennibranchiate (per-en-ni-brang'ki-ât), a. [L. perennis, perpetual, and branchia, gills.] Having the branchiae or gills permanent; retaining the gills through life, as certain amphibians.

Perennibranchiata (per-en-ni-brang'ki-ât), n. An amphibian of the section Perennibranchiata (which see).

Perennity† (per-en-î-ti), n. [L. perennitas. See PERENNIAL.] An enduring or continuing through the whole year without ceasing. Derham.

Pererration (pér-e-râ'shon), n. [L. pererro—per, through, and erro, to wander.] A wandering or rambling through various places. 'After a long pererration to and fro, to return as wise as they went.' Hovell.

Perfect (pér'fekt), a. [L. perfectus, pp. of perficio, to complete or make through, to carry to the end—per, thoroughly, and facio, to do.] 1. Brought to a consummation or completion; having received and possessing all its parts; finished; completed.—2. Having all that is requisite to its nature and kind; of the best, highest, or completest type; exact or unexceptionable in every particular; without blemish or defect; consummate; as, a perfect statue; a perfect likeness. Perfectionism (pér-fek'shon-izm), n. The doctrine of the Perfectionists.

Perfectionist (pér-fek'shon-ist), n. 1. One pretending to perfection.—2. One who believes that some persons actually attain to moral perfection in the present life.—3. One of a small sect of Christians founded in America about the middle of the nineteenth century on socialist principles. They teach that the Church consists not of any religious organization, but of saintly persons, sinless in body and soul, who, rejecting law and usage, submit their passions to the divine will. All the members, women as well as men, are regarded as equals, and profess themselves untrammelled by any restraints save those of the spirit working within them, regulated by public opinion. At one time they had a complex marriage system by which each man was the husband and brother of each woman, but latterly marriage in the ordinary sense was introduced. The founder of the sect was John Humphrey Noyes, and the community is established on a farm at Oneida Creek, in the state of New York, being now on a joint-stock footing. The members call themselves also Bible Communists. The name is sometimes also applied to the Wesleyan Methodists and Plymouth Brethren, from their doctrine that man can attain to perfection in this life. This dogma they base on 1 John iii. 9, 'Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin.'

Perfectionment (pér-fek'shon-ment), n. State of being perfect. Gray.

Perfective (pér-fekt'iv), a. Conducting to make perfect or bring to perfection; followed by of.

Perjury (pér-jû-ri), n. [See PERJURE, v.t.] The act or crime of wilfully making a false oath in judicial proceedings to one who has authority; knowingly making a false oath in a judicial proceeding in a matter material to the issue or cause in question. The penalties of perjury attach to wilful falsehood in an affirmation by a Quaker, Moravian, or Separatist, or any other witness where such affirmation is in lieu of an oath. The offence of perjury is a misdemeanour. Popularly, the mere act of making a false oath, or of violating an oath, provided it be lawful, is considered perjury.

Perk (pérk), n. [A form of perch. See PERCH.] A pole placed horizontally, on which yarns, &c., are hung to dry; also, a peg (perket) for similar purposes. [Provincial.]

Perk (pérk), a. [W. perc, neat, trim, smart; comp. also perit, spruce, dapper.] n. Perk; trim; smart; brisk; airy; jaunty; vain. 'Perk as a peacock.' Spenser.

Perk (pérk), v.t. To hold up the head with affected smartness. 'Edward's miss thus perks it in your face.' Pope.

Perk (pérk), v.t. To dress; to make trim or smart; to prank.

I swear 'tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perked up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shak.

Perk (pérk), v.t. To peer; to look narrowly or sharply. 'You'd be perking at the glass.' George Eliot.

Perlidæ (pér-li-dé), n. pl. [From Perla, one of the genera, and Gr. eidos, resemblance.] A family of neuropterous (according to some orthopterous) insects, distinguished by the large size of the posterior pair of wings. They frequent damp and marshy situations, and the borders of lakes and rivers. Some of them are the favourite food of fishes. They abound in temperate climates. Sometimes called Stone-flies.

Perlite (pér-lit), n. [Fr. perle, a pearl, and Gr. lithos, a stone.] The same as Pearl-stone.

Perloust (pér-lus), a. Perilous. Spenser.

Perlustration (pér-lus-trá-shon), n. [L. perlustro—per, through, and lustrum, to survey.] The act of viewing all over. Howell.

Permanent,† a. Permanent; durable. Lydgate.

Permanence, Permanency (pér-ma-nens, pér-ma-nen-si), n. [See PERMANENT.] The state or quality of being permanent; continuance in the same state, place, or duration; fixedness; as, the permanence of a government or state; the permanence of institutions, or of a system of principles. 'Permanence or fixedness in being.' Sir M. Hale.

Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies. Boyle.

China is an instance of permanence without progression. Coleridge.

Permanent (pér-ma-nent), a. [L. permanens, permanent, from permaneo, to continue—per, throughout, and maneo, to remain.] Continuing in the same state, or without any change that destroys the form or nature of the thing; remaining unaltered or unremoved; durable; lasting; abiding; fixed. 'Eternity stands permanent and fixt.' Dryden.—Permanent ink, a solution of nitrate of silver thickened with sap-green or cochineal, used for marking linen.—Permanent way, in rail, the finished road-bed and track, including bridges, viaducts, crossings, and switches. The term is used in contradistinction to a temporary way, such as is used in construction in removing the soil of cuttings, &c.—Permanent white, sulphate of baryta. It is used in the manufacture of fine earthenware, and as a pigment.—Lasting, Durable, Permanent. See under LASTING.

Permanently (pér-ma-nent-li), adv. In a permanent manner; with long continuance; durably; in a fixed state or place; as, a government permanently established. Boyle.

Pernanganic (pér-man-gan-ik), a. Obtained from manganese.—Pernanganic acid (Mn₂O₃H₂), an acid obtained in a state of aqueous solution by decomposing barium salt with sulphuric acid.

Pernansion,† n. [L. pernansio, a remaining, persevering.] Continuance. Sir T. Browne.

Permeability (pér-mé-a-bil'i-ti), n. The quality or state of being permeable.

Permeable (pér-mé-a-bl), a. [L. permeabilis. See PERMEATE.] Capable of being permeated or passed through without rupture or displacement of its parts: applied particularly to substances that admit the passage of fluids; as, cloth, leather, wood, are permeable to water and oil; glass is permeable to light, but not to water.

Permeably (pér-mé-a-bl), adv. In a permeable manner.

Permeant (pér-mé-ant), a. Passing through. Sir T. Browne.

Permeate (pér-mé-át), v.t. pret. & pp. permeated; ppr. permeating. [L. permeo, permeatum—prefix per, through, and meo, to glide, flow, or pass.] To pass through the pores or interstices of; to penetrate and pass through without rupture or displacement of parts: applied particularly to fluids which pass through substances of loose texture; as, water permeates sand or a filtering stone; light permeates glass.

Permeation (pér-mé-á-shon), n. The act of permeating or passing through the pores or interstices of a body.

Permian (pér-mi-an), a. [From Perm, in Russia, or that part of Russia which formed the ancient kingdom of Permia, where the series is largely developed.] In geol. a term applied to a system of rocks lying beneath the triassic rocks, and immediately above the carboniferous system. Formerly the Permian and triassic rocks were grouped together under the name of the new red sandstone system, but later geologists have separated them on paleontological grounds, the Permian group containing many paleozoic forms, while the remains of the triassic are largely mesozoic. The Permian forms the uppermost of the great paleozoic series, and is unconformable in England on the carboniferous, while it passes by almost insensible gradations into the triassic. In England the Permian rocks are largely developed in the county of Durham. Called also Magnesian Limestone.

Permissible (pér-mis'si-bl), a. [L. permissco—per, through, and misceo, to mix.] Capable or admitting of being mixed. [Rare.]

Permiss† (pér-mis'), n. A permission of choice or selection; specifically, in rhet. a figure by which a matter is permitted or committed to the decision of one's adversary. 'Administering one excess against another to reduce us to a permiss.' Milton.

Permissibility (pér-mis'i-bil'i-ti), n. The quality of being permissible. Eccler. Rev.

Permissible (pér-mis'i-bl), a. [See PERMIT.] Proper to being permitted or allowed; allowable. 'Make all permissible excuses for my absence.' Lamb.

If otherwise expedient the nomenclature is permissible. Sir W. Hamilton.

Permissibly (pér-mis'i-bl), adv. In a permissible manner; by allowance.

Permission (pér-mis'hon), n. [L. permissio, from permittere, to permit.] The act of permitting or allowing; authorization; allowance; license or liberty granted; leave.

You have given me your permission for this address. Dryden.

He craved a fair permission to depart,
And there defend his marches. Tennyson.

Permissive (pér-mis'iv), a. 1. Permitting; granting liberty; allowing. 'By his permissive will.' Milton.—2. Granted; suffered without hindrance.

Thus I emboldened spake, and freedom used Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton.

—Permissive bill, a bill which has been repeatedly brought before Parliament, whose object is to empower two-thirds of the inhabitants of any town or district to prohibit the traffic in intoxicating liquors within the bounds of such town or district.—Permissive laws, such laws as permit certain persons to have or enjoy the use of certain things, or to do certain acts.—Permissive waste, in law, the neglect of necessary repairs.

Permissively (pér-mis'iv-li), adv. In a permissive manner; by allowance; without prohibition or hindrance.

Permistion (pér-mis'hon), n. [L. permissio, permixtio, to mingle, mix together.] The act of mixing; the state of being mingled.

Permit (pér-mit), v.t. pret. & pp. permitted; ppr. permitting. [L. permittere, to let go, to let loose, to allow, concede, permit—prefix per, and mittere, to send; Fr. permettre.] 1. To allow by silent consent or by not prohibiting; to suffer without giving express authority.

What God neither commands nor forbids, he permits with approbation to be done or left undone. Hooker.

2. To grant leave or liberty to by express consent; to allow expressly; to give leave, liberty, or license to do; as, a license that permits a person to sell intoxicating liquors. 3.† To give over; to leave; to give up or resign; to refer.

For provided our duty is secured, for the degrees and for the instruments every man is permitted to himself. Fer. Taylor.

Let us not aggravate our sorrows,
But to the gods permit the event of things. Addison.

—Allow, Permit, Suffer, Tolerate. See under ALLOW.—SYN. To allow, let, grant, admit, suffer, tolerate, endure, consent to.

Permit (pér-mit'), v.t. To grant leave, license, or permission; to enable a person to do something; to allow; as, we shall go there if circumstances permit.

Permixtion (pér-miks'ch'on), n. A mixing or state of being mixed. Brerewood.

Permutable (pér-mü'ta-bl), a. Capable of being permuted; exchangeable.

Permutableness (pér-mü'ta-bl-nes), n. State of being permutable.

Permutably (pér-mü'ta-bli), adv. In a permutable manner; by interchange.

Permutation (pér-mü-tá'shon), n. [L. permutatio. See PERMUTE.] 1. Interchange; concurrent changes; mutual change; interchange. 'The intolerable distresses brought upon them by the violent convulsions and permutations that have been made in property.' Burke.—2. In math. change or different combination of any number of quantities. Permutations differ from combinations in this, that the latter has no reference to the order in which the quantities are combined; whereas in the former this order is considered, and consequently the number of permutations always exceeds the number of combinations. If n represent the number of quantities, then the number of permutations that can be formed out of them, taking two by two together, is $n \times (n-1)$; taken three and three together, is $n \times (n-1) \times (n-2)$, and so on. See COMBINATION.—Permutation lock, a lock in which the moving parts are capable of transposition, so that being arranged in any concerted order, it becomes necessary before shooting the bolt to arrange the tumblers. E. H. Knight.

Permute (pér-müt'), v.t. pret. & pp. permuted; ppr. permuting. [L. permuto—prefix per, and muto, to change.] 1. To interchange.—2. To exchange; to barter. Hack-luyt.

curve.—Perpendicular style, in arch. the florid or Tudor style of Gothic. The window affords the most striking character of this style; and the eye at once distinguishes it from any other by observing that perpendicular lines prevail throughout all the tracery. This style of Gothic was peculiar to England. The building shown in the annexed cut is an excellent specimen of this style.—Perpendicular lift, a contrivance on canals for passing boats from one level to another.

Perpendicular (pér-pend-di-kl-ér), n. 1. A line at right angles to the plane of the horizon; a vertical line or any body standing in that direction.—2. In geom. a line falling at right angles on another line or on a plane, or making equal angles with it on each side. Thus if the straight line A B, falling on the straight line D C, makes the angles A B C, A B D equal to one another, A B is called a perpendicular to D C.—3. In gun. a small instrument for finding the centre line of a piece of ordnance, in the operation of pointing it at an object.

Perpendicularity (pér-pend-di-kl-ér-i-ti), n. The state of being perpendicular. 'The perpendicularity of these lines.' Watts.

Perpendicularly (pér-pend-di-kl-ér-li), adv. In a perpendicular manner; so as to be perpendicular; vertically.

Perpension† (pér-pen'shon), n. [From L. perpendo, perpensum, to weigh carefully. See PERPEND.] Consideration.

Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Sir T. Browne.

Perpensity† (pér-pen-si-ti), n. Consideration; a pondering. Swift.

Perpent-stone (pér-pent-stón), n. In arch. see PERPEND.

Perpessio† (pér-pesh'on), n. [L. perpessio, perpessio, from perpettor, to bear with patience—per, thoroughly, and pator, to suffer to endure.] Suffering; endurance. Bp. Pearson.

Perpetrate (pér-pe-trát), v.t. pret. & pp. perpetrated; ppr. perpetrating. [L. perpetro—per, through, thoroughly, and pairo, to finish.] To do, execute, or perform, generally in a bad sense; to be guilty of; to commit; as, to perpetrate a crime.

For whatsoever we perpetrate, We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.

Also used humorously for to produce something execrable or shocking; as, to perpetrate a pun.

Sir P. induced two of his sisters to perpetrate a duet. Charlotte Brontë.

Perpetration (pér-pe-trá'shon), n. 1. The act of perpetrating; the act of committing a crime.—2. An evil action.

The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetrations. Eikon Basilike.

Perpetrator (pér-pe-trâ-tôr), n. One that perpetrates; one that commits a crime.

Perpetuable (pér-pet-ü-a-bl), a. That may be perpetuated or continued indefinitely.

Varieties are perpetuable, like species. Asa Gray.

Perpetual (pér-pet-ü-al), a. [Fr. perpétuel; L. perpetuus, from perpetuus, perpetual, continuous—per, through, and peto, to direct one's course to, to seek, to go to or towards.] 1. Never ceasing; continuing for ever in future time; destined to be eternal; as, a perpetual covenant; a perpetual statute. — 2. Continuing or continued without intermission; uninterrupted; as, a perpetual stream; the perpetual action of the heart and arteries.

Capital is kept in existence from age to age not by preservation but by perpetual reproduction.

J. S. Mill.

—Perpetual curate, a permanent minister of a curacy in which all the tithes are appropriated and no vicarage is endowed.

—Perpetual motion, motion that once originated generates a power of continuing itself for ever or indefinitely, by means of mechanism or some application of the force of gravity. The celebrated problem of a perpetual motion consists in the inventing of a machine which shall have the principles of its motion within itself, and numberless schemes have been proposed for its solution; but it has been demonstrated again and again that such a machine is impossible, unless friction and the resistance of the air, which necessarily retard, and finally stop the motions of machines, could be removed. In speaking of the perpetual motion, it is to be understood that from the forces by which motion may be produced we are to exclude air, water, and other natural agents, as heat, atmospheric changes, &c. The only admissible agents are the inertia of matter, and its attractive forces, which may all be considered of the same kind as gravitation. — Perpetual screw, an endless screw. See ENDLESS. — Continuous, Incessant, Continual, Perpetual. See under CONTINUOUS. — SYN. Never-ceasing, endless, eternal, everlasting, never-failing, unceasing, ceaseless, unfailing, perennial, enduring, permanent, lasting, uninterrupted, incessant, constant.

Perpetually (pér-pet-ü-al-i), adv. In a perpetual manner; constantly; continually.

The Bible and Common Prayer Book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language. Swift.

Perpetualty (pér-pet-ü-al-i-ti), n. The state or condition of being perpetual.

Perpetuate (pér-pet-ü-ât), v. t. pret. & pp. perpetuated; ppr. perpetuating. [L. perpetuo, perpetuatum, from perpetuus. See PERPETUAL.] To make perpetual; to cause to endure or to be continued indefinitely; to preserve from extinction or oblivion; to eternalize; as, to perpetuate the remembrance of a great event or of an illustrious character.

The fondness which some have felt to perpetuate their names when their race has fallen extinct, is well known. I. D'Israeli.

Perpetuate, Perpetuated (pér-pet-ü-ât, pér-pet-ü-ât-ed), p. and a. Made perpetual; continued through eternity, or for an indefinite time; recurring continuously; continually repeated or reiterated.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven resounding for ever in our ears? Hammond.

The trees and flowers remain By Nature's care perpetuate and self-sown. Southey.

Perpetuation (pér-pet-ü-â-shon), n. The act of perpetuating or making perpetual; the act of preserving from extinction or oblivion through an endless existence, or for an indefinite period of time. — Perpetuation of testimony, in law, the taking of testimony, in certain cases, in order to preserve it for future use. Thus a party who is in possession of property, and fears that his right may at some future time be disputed, is entitled to examine witnesses in order to preserve that testimony which may be lost by the death of such witnesses before he can prosecute his claim, or before he is called on to defend his right.

Perpetuity (pér-pe-tü-i-ti), n. [Fr. perpétuité; L. perpetuitas, from perpetuus, perpetual (which see).] 1. The state or quality of being perpetual; endless duration; continued uninterrupted existence, or duration for an indefinite period of time; as, the perpetuity of laws and institutions. 'Those laws which God for perpetuity hath established.' Hooker.

Mortals who sought and found, by dangerous roads, A path to perpetuity of fame. Byron.

2. Something of which there will be no end; something lasting for ever or for an indefinitely long time. 'A mess of pottage for a birthright, a present repast for a perpetuity.' South. — 3. In law, (a) duration to all futurity; exemption from intermission or ceasing. (b) An estate which is so settled in tail that it cannot be made void. — 4. In the doctrine of annuities, the number of years in which the simple interest of any principal sum will amount to the same as the principal itself; or it is the number of years' purchase to be given for an annuity which is to continue for ever; also, the annuity itself.

Perplex (pér-pleks'), v. t. [From L. perplexus, entangled, interwoven, confused, intricate, involved, from per, intens., and plecto, plexum, to twist, from the root of Gr. pleko, L. plico, to fold.] 1. To make intricate; to involve; to entangle; to make complicated and difficult to be understood or unraveled.

What was thought obscure, perplexed, and too hard for our weak parts, will lie open to the understanding in a fair view. Locke.

Dropped manna, and could make the worse appear The better reason, to perplex and dash Maturest counsels. Milton.

2. To embarrass; to puzzle; to distract; to tease with suspense, anxiety, or ambiguity. 'We are perplexed, but not in despair.' 2 Cor. iv. 8.

He perplexes the minds of the fair sex with nice speculations of philosophy, when he should engage their hearts. Dryden.

3. To plague; to vex. Glanville. — Embarrass, Puzzle, Perplex. See under EMBARRASS. — SYN. To entangle, involve, complicate, embarrass, puzzle, bewilder, confuse, distract, harass, vex, plague, tease, molest.

Perplexing (pér-pleks'-ing), p. and a. Embarrassing; difficult; intricate.

Perplexity (pér-pleks'-i-ti), n. 1. The state of being perplexed; distraction of mind through doubt or difficulty; anxiety; embarrassment. 'Walking slow, in doubt and great perplexity.' Tennyson.

Such perplexity of mind As dreams too lively leave behind. Coleridge.

2. The state of being intricate or involved.

Let him look for the labyrinth; for I cannot discern any unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts. Stillingfleet.

Perplexiveness† (pér-pleks'-iv-nes), n. The quality of being perplexing; tendency to perplex. 'The perplexiveness of imagination.' Dr. H. More.

Perplexity† (pér-pleks'-li), adv. Perplexedly. 'Set down so perplexity by the Saxon annalist.' Milton.

Perplexity† (pér-pleks'-li), adv. Perplexedly.

Perpotation (pér-pô-tâ-shon), n. [Prefix per, and potation.] The act of drinking largely; a thorough drinking-bout.

Perquisite (pér-kwi-zit), n. [L. perquisitum, something diligently inquired after, from perquiri — per, intens., and quero, to seek, look, or search for.] 1. Something obtained from a place or office over and above the settled wages or emoluments; something in addition to regular wages or salary. — 2. In law, whatever a man gets by industry or purchases with his money; opposed to things which come to him by descent.

Perquisites† (pér-kwi-zit-ed), a. Supplied with perquisites. 'Perquisites varlets.' Savage.

Perquisition (pér-kwi-zî-shon), n. [Fr. perquisition. See above.] A thorough inquiry or search. Sir W. Scott.

Perrie, t. n. [Fr. pierrerie, jewels, from pierre, L. and Gr. petra, a stone.] Jewels; precious stones. Chaucer.

Perrier† (pér-î-ér), n. [O. Fr. perriere. See PERRIE.] An engine for throwing stones. Hackluyt.

Perron (pér-on), n. [Fr.; L. L. petronus, a perron, from L. and Gr. petra (Fr. pierre), a stone.] In arch. an external stair by which access is given to the entrance-door of a building when the principal floor is raised above the level of the ground.

Perroquet (per-o-ke't'), n. The same as Parrakeet.

Perruque (pér-riuk'), n. [Fr.] A peruke.

Perrier (pér-ri-êr'), n. [Fr. See PERRIE.] A wig-maker.

Perry (pér-i'), n. [Fr. poiré, perry, from poire, a pear, L. pyrum, a pear.] A fermented liquor made from the juice of pears. It is analogous to cider, and prepared much in the same way. It forms a pleasant and wholesome beverage.

Persecute (pér-se-küt), v. t. pret. & pp. persecuted; ppr. persecuting. [Fr. persecuter, L. persequor, persecutus, to persecute — per, intens., and sequor, to follow.] 1. To harass or afflict with repeated acts of cruelty or annoyance; to injure or afflict persistently; specifically, to afflict, harass, or punish on account of opinions, for adherence to a particular creed or system of religious principles, or to a mode of worship.

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you. Mat. v. 11.

Should banded unions persecute Opinion, and induce a time When single thought is civil crime, And individual freedom mute. Tennyson.

2. To harass with solicitations or importunity. Johnson.

Persecuting (pér-se-küt-ing), a. Given to persecution.

Persecution (pér-se-küt-shon), n. 1. The act or practice of persecuting; especially the infliction of pain or death upon others unjustly, for adhering to a religious creed or mode of worship, either by way of penalty or in order to force them to renounce their principles.

By persecution, I mean, the employment of any pains or penalties, the administration of any uneasiness to body or mind, in consequence of a man's belief, or with a view to change it. Its essential feature is this; that it addresses itself to the will, not to the understanding; it seeks to modify opinion by the use of fears, instead of reasons — of motives, instead of arguments. J. Martineau.

2. The state of being persecuted; the suffering of pain.

Our necks are under persecution; we labour and have no rest. Lam. v. 5.

3.† A carrying on; prosecution. Hales.

Persecutive (pér-se-küt-iv), a. Following; persecuting.

Persecutor (pér-se-küt-ér), n. One who persecutes; one who pursues and harasses another unjustly and vexatiously, particularly on account of religious principles.

Henry rejected the Pope's supremacy, but retained every corruption beside, and became a cruel persecutor. Swift.

Persecutrix (pér-se-küt-riks), n. A female who persecutes.

Perseides (pér-sé-i-déz), n. pl. A name given to the August meteors, because they seem to radiate from the constellation Perseus.

It is surrounded by Andromeda, Aries, Taurus, Auriga, Camelopardalus, and Cassiopeia, and contains, according to the British Catalogue, fifty-nine stars.

Persever† (pér-sev-ér), v. t. To persevere.

In obstinate condolement is a course Of impious stubbornness. Shak.

[This is the form of the word generally used by Shakspeare.]

Perseverance (pér-se-vê-rans), n. [Fr. from L. perseverantia. See PERSEVERE.] 1. The act or habit of persevering; persistence in anything undertaken; continued pursuit or prosecution of any business or enterprise begun: applied alike to good and evil.

Perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright. Shak.

2. In theol. continuance in a state of grace to a state of glory. Sometimes called Final Perseverance and Perseverance of Saints.—SYN. Persistence, steadfastness, constancy, steadiness.

Perseverant† (pér-se-vér'ant), a. Constant in pursuit of an undertaking. Bp. Hall.

Perseverantly† (pér-se-vér'ant-li), adv. Perseveringly.

Persevere (pér-se-vér'), v.i. pret. & pp. per-severed; ppr. persevering. [L. persevero, from perseverus, very severe or strict—per, intens., and severus, severe, serious, grave, strict.] To persist in any business or enterprise undertaken; to pursue steadily any design or course commenced; not to give over or abandon what is undertaken. See PERSIST.

Would those, who, by opinion placed on high,
Stand fair and perfect in the country's eye,
Maintain that honour, let me in their ear
Hint this essential doctrine—per-severe. Churchill.

To persevere in any evil course makes you unhappy in this life, and will certainly throw you into everlasting torments in the next. Abp. Wake.

Persevering (pér-se-vér'ing), p. and a. Persisting in any business or course begun; constant in the execution of a purpose or enterprise; as, a persevering student.

Perseveringly (pér-se-vér'ing-li), adv. In a persevering manner; with perseverance or continued pursuit of what is undertaken.

Persian (pér-shi-an), a. Pertaining to Persia, to the Persians or their language; Persic.

Persian (pér-shi-an), n. 1. A native of Persia.—2. The language spoken in Persia.—3. In arch. a male figure draped after the ancient Persian manner, and serving to support an entablature after the manner of a column or pilaster. See ATLANTES and CARYATID.—4. A thin silk, used principally for lining coats, gowns, and petticoats in the seventeenth century. Planché.—Persian apple, the peach.—Persian berry, the fruit of Rhamnus infectiorius, and probably of other species, used by the modern Greeks to dye morocco leather, and employed also in calico-printing.—Persian blinds, jalousies; venetian blinds.—Persian carpet, a carpet made in one piece, instead of in breadths or strips to be joined. The warp and weft are of linen or hemp, and the tufts of coloured wool are inserted by twisting them around the warp all along the row. A line of tufts being inserted, a shoot of the weft is made, and then beaten up to close the fabric.—Persian fire, in med. same as Anthrax.—Persian lily, a plant of the genus Fritillaria (F. persica), a native of Persia, and cultivated as a garden flower. See FRI-TILLARIA.—Persian powder, a preparation of the flowers of the composite plant Pyrethrum carneum or roseum, which are dried and reduced to the form of a powder, which has wonderful efficacy in destroying noxious insects. The plant belongs to the nat. order Composite. It is often grown in gardens as an ornamental plant.—Persian wheel, an engine contrived for raising water to irrigate lands which lie on the borders or banks of rivers, and for other purposes. It usually consists of a large wheel with a series of buckets fixed to its circumference, which raise the water.

Persic (pér'sik), n. The Persian language. It is a member of the Iranian group of the Aryan family of tongues.

Persic (pér'sik), a. Of or belonging to Persia; Persian.

Persicaria (per-si-ká-ri-a), n. [Fr. persicaire, from L. L. persicarius, from L. persica, a peach.] The common name of various British plants of the genus Polygonum, the garden persicaria being P. orientale, a tall handsome annual, strikingly ornamented with drooping clusters of pink flowers. See POLYGONUM.

Persicot (pér'si-kot), n. [Fr., from L. persica, a peach or nectarine.] A kind of cordial made of the kernels of apricots, nectarines, &c., with refined spirit. Written also Persecot.

Persiflage (pár-sé-flázh), n. [Fr., from persifler, to quizz; L. sibilo, to hiss.] Idle bantering talk or humour; frivolous jeering style of treating or regarding any subject, serious or otherwise.

Persifleur (pár-sé-flér, è long), n. One who indulges in persiflage; a banterer; a quizz.

No people ever were so little prone to admire at all as the French of Voltaire. Persiflage was the character of their whole mind. . . . They feel without that, if persiflage be the great thing, there never was such a persifleur. Carlyle.

Persimmon (pér-sim'on), n. [Virginia Indian.] The fruit of trees of the genus Diospyros, or any tree of the genus, especially D. virginiana, inhabiting the Southern United States, where it attains the height of 60 feet or more. The fruit is succulent, reddish, and about the size of a small plum, containing a few oval stones. It is powerfully astringent when green, but when fully ripe the pulp becomes soft, palatable, and very sweet. It is eaten both by man and wild and domestic animals; it is also pounded, dried, and made into cakes, or it is fermented and yields by distillation an ardent spirit.—To rake up the persimmons, to rake up the plums of the persimmon-tree; to draw in the money; to pocket the stakes. [American.]

Persis (pér'sis), n. A kind of colouring matter prepared from lichens, the mass being of a drier character than archil. Simmonds.

Persism (pér'sizm), n. A Persian idiom.

Persist (pér-sist'), v.i. [Fr. persister, L. persisto—per, through, and sisto, to stand.] To continue steadily and firmly in the pursuit of any business or course commenced; to continue determined in speech or action against some amount of opposition; to persevere. [Persist is nearly synonymous with persevere; but persist frequently implies more obstinacy than persevere, particularly in that which is evil or injurious to others.]

Thus to persist
In doing wrong extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Shak.

Persistence, Persistency (pér-sist'ens, pér-sist'en-si), n. 1. The state of persisting, or of being persistent; steady pursuit of what is undertaken; perseverance in a good or evil course, more generally in that which is evil and injurious to others, or unadvisable.—2. Obstinacy; contumacy.

By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistence. Shak.

3. In physics, the continuance of an effect after the cause which first gave rise to it is removed; as, the persistence of the impression of light on the retina after the luminous object is withdrawn; the persistence of the motion of an object after the moving force is withdrawn.

Persistent (pér-sist'ent), a. 1. Inclined to persist; enduring; persevering; tenacious. 'Persistent as they have been.' Is. Taylor.

Henceforward scarcely could she front in hall,
Or elsewhere Modred's narrow, foxy face,
Heart-hiding smile, and gray, persistent eye. Tennyson.

2. In bot. continuing without withering; opposed to caducous or marcescent; as, a persistent calyx, one remaining after the corolla has withered.

Persistently (pér-sist'ent-li), adv. In a persistent manner.

Persistingly (pér-sist'ing-li), adv. In a persisting manner; perseveringly; steadily.

Persistive (pér-sist'iv), a. Steady in pursuit; not receding from a purpose or undertaking; persevering; persistent. 'To find persistive constancy in men.' Shak.

Persolve (pér-solv'), v.t. To pay completely, thoroughly, or wholly. Bale.

Person (pér'son), n. [L. persona, primarily a mask used by actors on the stage, hence, a character, a person—said to be from per-sono, to sound through—per, through, and sono, to sound. This, however, is uncertain.] 1. An individual human being, consisting of body and soul; a being possessed of personality; a man, woman, or child.

A person . . . is a thinking intelligent being that has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as itself, the same thinking thing, in different times and places. Locke.

2. A man, woman, or child, considered as opposed to things, or distinct from them.

A zeal for persons is far more easy to be perverted than a zeal for things. Sprat.

3. Bodily form; human frame, with its characteristic appearance; living body; as, tall of person; cleanly in person.

'Tis in her heart alone that you must reign;
You'll find her person difficult to gain. Dryden.

Were on his princely person, but thro' these Princelike his bearing shone. Tennyson.

4. A human being, indefinitely; one; a man;

an individual. 'For there is no respect of persons with God.' Rom. ii. 11.

If you choose to represent the various parts in life by holes upon a table, of different shapes, . . . and the persons acting these parts by bits of wood of similar shapes, we shall generally find that the triangular person has got into the square hole, the oblong into the triangular, and a square person has squeezed himself into a round hole. Sidney Smith.

5. Any one of the three beings, individualities, or existences of the Trinity.

For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son, and another of the Holy Ghost. Catholic Prayer.

6.† The parson or rector of a parish. Holinshead.—7. A human being represented in dialogue, fiction, or on the stage; character.

From his first appearance upon the stage, in his new person of a scyphant or juggler, instead of his former person of a prince, he was exposed to the derision of the courtiers and the common people. Bacon.

8. Character or part sustained by one in the ordinary relationships of life.

How different is the same man from himself, as he sustains the person of a magistrate and that of a friend. South.

9. In gram. one of three relations in which nouns and pronouns are regarded as standing to the act of speaking, a pronoun of the first person denoting the speaker, the second person one who is spoken to, and the third person one who or that which is spoken of. All nouns are of the third person. Hence we apply the term person to one of the three inflections of a verb singular and plural.—An artificial person, in law, a corporation or body politic.—In person, by one's self; with bodily presence; not by representative. 'We paid in person.' Tennyson. 'The king in person visits all around.' Dryden.

Person† (pér'son), v.t. To represent as a person; to make to resemble; to image. Milton.

Personable (pér'son-a-bl), a. 1. Having a well-formed body or person; graceful; of good appearance; as, a personable man or woman. 'Wise, warlike, personable, courteous, and kind.' Spenser.—2. In law, (a) enabled to maintain pleas in court. (b) Having capacity to take anything granted or given.

Personage (pér'son-áj), n. [Fr. personnage, personage, character, part.] 1. An individual; a person; especially, a man or woman of distinction; as, an illustrious personage.

The monumental pomp of age
Was with this goodly personage. Wordsworth.

2. Exterior; appearance; stature; air.

And with her personage, her tall personage,
She hath prevail'd with him. Shak.

3. Character assumed.

The Venetians, naturally grave, love to give in to the follies of such seasons, when disguised in a false personage. Addison.

4. Character represented.

Some persons must be found, already known in history, whom we may make the actors and personages of this fable. W. Broome.

Personal (pér'son-al), a. [L. personalis.]

1. Pertaining to a person as distinct from a thing; belonging to men or women, not to things.—2. Relating to an individual; affecting individuals; peculiar or proper to him or her, or to private actions or character; individual; as, to have a personal spite against a man. 'The words are conditional; if thou doest well; and so personal to Cain.' Locke.

The Divine Comedy is a personal narrative. Dante is the eye-witness and ear-witness of that which he relates. Macaulay.

3. Applying to the person, character, or conduct of an individual, generally in a disparaging manner; as, personal reflections or remarks. 'Splenetic, personal, base.' Tennyson.—4. Pertaining to the person or bodily form; belonging to face and figure; corporeal.

This heroic constancy now determined him to desire in her a princess, whose personal charms were now become the least part of her character. Addison.

5. Done in person; not effected or constituted by representatives; as, a personal interview.

The daughter of the king of France, . . . Importunes personal conference with his grace. Shak.

6.† Present in person. 'The absent king . . . when he was personal in the Irish war.' Shak.—7. In gram. denoting or pointing to the person; having the modifications of the three persons; as, a personal pronoun; a personal verb.—Personal acts of parliament, statutes confined to particular persons, such as an act authorizing a person to change his name, &c.—Per- sonal action, in law, (a) an action that can be brought only by the person himself that is injured. (b) An action which is not an action for the recovery of land. — Personal bond, in Scots law, a bond which acknowledges receipt of a sum of money, and binds the grantor, his heirs, executors, and successors to repay the sum at a specified term, with a penalty in case of failure, and interest on the sum while the same remains unpaid. — Personal chattels, goods or movables. — Personal diligence or execution, in Scots law, a process which consists of arrestment, pointing, and imprisonment. — Personal equation, the correction of personal differences between particular individuals as to exactness in observations with astronomical instruments. — Personal estate. Same as Personal Property. — Personal identity, in metaph. sameness of being at every stage of life, of which consciousness is the evidence. — Personal pronoun, in gram. one of the pronouns I, we, thou, you, he, she, it, they. — Personal property, movables; chattels; things belonging to the person, as money, jewels, furniture, &c., as distinguished from real estate in land and houses. (See CHATTEL and REAL.) In the law of England the distinction between real and personal property is very nearly the same as the distinction between heritable and movable property in the law of Scotland. — Personal representatives, the executors or administrators of a person deceased. — Personal tithes, those that are paid out of such profits as come by the labour of a man's person, as by buying and selling, gains of merchandise, handicrafts, &c. — Personal verb, in gram. a verb which has or may have a person as nominative.

Personal (pér'son-əl), n. In law, any movable thing, either living or dead; a movable. Personalism (pér'son-al-izm), n. Quality of being personal.

Personality (pér'son-ə-lī-ti), n. 1. That which constitutes an individual a distinct person, or that which constitutes individuality; the state of existing as a thinking intelligent being.

The personality of an intelligent being extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness. Locke.

Personality is individuality existing in itself, but with a nature as its ground. Coleridge.

2. Direct application or applicability to a person; specifically, an application of remarks to the conduct, character, or appearance of some person; a remark reflecting in some way on an individual; as, to avoid personalities; to indulge in personalities.

Mr. Tiliot had looked higher and higher since his gin had become so famous; and in the year '29 he had, in Mr. Muscat's hearing, spoken of Dissenters as sneaks—a personality which could not be overlooked. George Eliot.

3. Application limited to certain persons or certain classes of persons.

During the latter half of that century the important step was made of abolishing the personality of the code and applying it to all persons of whatever race living within the territory. Brougham.

4. In law, personal estate. See PERSONALITY. — Personality of laws, a term applied to all those laws which concern the condition, state, and capacity of persons, as the reality of laws is applied to all those laws which concern property or things. An action is said to be in the personality or personality when it is brought against the right person, or the person against whom, in law, it lies.

Personalize (pér'son-al-īz), v.t. pret. & pp. personalized; ppr. personalizing. To make personal. Warburton.

Personally (pér'son-ə-lī), adv. 1. In a personal manner; in person; by bodily presence; not by representative or substitute; as, to be personally present; to deliver a letter personally. — 2. With respect to an individual; particularly.

She bore a mortal hatred to the house of Lancaster, and personally to the king. Bacon.

3. As regards one's personal existence or individuality; as, to remain personally the same being.

Personalty (pér'son-ə-lī), n. In law, personal property, in distinction from realty or real property. See PERSONAL, REAL. — Action in personalty. See PERSONALITY.

Personate (pér'son-āt), v.t. pret. & pp. personated; ppr. personating. [From person (which see).] 1. To assume the character or appearance of, whether in real life or on the stage; to represent by an assumed appearance; to act the part of; as, he tried to personate his brother; in this play he personated a miser. — 2. To act, play, or perform; to assume or put on.

Herself she lays aside, and makes Ready to personate a mortal part. Crashaw.

3. To represent falsely or hypocritically; to pretend; with reflexive pronoun. [Rare.]

It has been the constant practice of the Jesuits to send over emissaries, with instructions to personate themselves members of the several sects amongst us. Swift.

4.† To represent by way of similitude; to typify; to personify.

The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline, Personates thee. Shak.

5.† To describe.

I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein . . . he shall find himself most feelingly personated. Shak.

6.† [Directly from L. persono, to celebrate—per, intens., and sono, to sound.] To celebrate loudly.

In fable, hymn, or song, so personating Their gods ridiculous, and themselves past shame. Milton.

Personate (pér'son-āt), v.t. pret. personated; ppr. personating. To play a fictitious character. Sir G. Buck. [Rare.]

Personate (pér'son-āt), a. [L. personatus, masked, from persona, a mask.] In bot. a term applied to a gamopetalous irregular corolla having the lower lip pushed upwards so as to close the hiatus between the two lips, as in the snapdragon.

Personated (pér'son-āt-ed), p. and a. [L. personatus, masked, counterfeit, from persona, a mask.] Counterfeited; feigned; disguised; pretended.

Piety is opposed to that personated devotion under which any kind of impurity is disguised. Hammond.

Personation (pér'son-ə'shon), n. The act of personating, or of counterfeiting the person or character of another. — False personation, in law, the offence of personating another for the purpose of fraud.

Personator (pér'son-āt-ēr), n. 1. One who assumes the character of another. — 2. One that acts or performs. B. Jonson.

Personality (pér'son-ə-lī-ti), n. Personality. 'The personality of God.' Coleridge. [Rare.]

Personer, † n. A person. Chaucer.

Personification (pér'son-ī-fī-kā'shon), n. 1. The act of personifying. — 2. In rh. a figure of speech or a species of metaphor, which consists in representing inanimate objects or abstract notions as endued with life and action, or possessing the attributes of living beings; prosopopoeia; as, 'the floods clap their hands,' 'the sun rejoices to run his race,' 'the hills and trees break forth into singing,' 'blushing shame,' &c. — 3. Embodiment; impersonation.

Personify (pér'son-ī-fī), v.t. pret. & pp. personified; ppr. personifying. [L. persona, person, and ficio, to make.] 1. To treat or regard as a person; to represent as a rational being; to treat for literary purposes as if endowed with the sentiments, actions, or language of a rational being or person. See PERSONIFICATION. — 2. To impersonate; to be an impersonation or embodiment of.

Personize (pér'son-īz), v.t. pret. & pp. personized; ppr. personizing. To personify. [Rare.]

Milton has personized them and put them into the court of chaos. Richardson.

Personnel (pér'son-əl), n. [Fr., from personne, L. persona, a person.] The body of persons employed in some public service, as the army, navy, &c., in contradistinction to the matériel, which consists of guns, stores, &c.

Perspective (pér-spek'tiv), a. [Fr., perspectif, from L. perspicio. See below.] 1. Producing certain optical effects when looked through; optical; as, a perspective glass. [Obsolete or obsolescent.] — 2. Pertaining to the art of perspective.

Perspective (pér-spek'tiv), n. [Fr., from L. perspicio, perspectum—per, through, and specio, to view. See SPECIES.] 1.† A glass through which objects are viewed; a telescope.

You hold the glass, but turn the perspective, And farther off the lessen'd object drive. Dryden.

[Formerly the term was applied to contrivances the exact nature of which is uncertain.

Like perspectives, which rightly gazed upon, Show nothing but confusion; eyed awry, Distinguish form. Shak.

Hazlitt in a note on the above passage defines perspectives as 'cut glasses used for reflecting images,' and the following extract from an old work called Humane Industry goes to show that the word was also used to denote a glass through which pictures drawn out of proportion were viewed and reduced to the natural appearance of the objects they were meant to represent.

A picture of a chancellor of France presented to the common beholder a multitude of little faces;—but if one did look at it through a perspective, there appeared only the single portraiture of the chancellor.]

2. The art or science which teaches how to produce the representation of an object or objects on a definite surface so as to affect the eye, when viewed from a given point, in the same manner as the object or objects themselves. Correctly defined, a perspective delineation is a section, by the plane or other surface on which the delineation is made, of the cone of rays proceeding from every part of the object to the eye of the spectator. It is intimately connected with the arts of design, and is particularly necessary in the art of painting, as without a correct observance of the rules of perspective no picture can have truth and life. Perspective alone enables us to represent foreshortenings with accuracy, and it is requisite in delineating even the simplest positions of objects. Perspective may be divided into two branches—linear and aerial. Linear perspective has reference to the position, form, magnitude, &c., of the several lines or contours of objects. The outlines of such objects as buildings, machinery, and most works which consist of geometrical forms, or which can be reduced to them, may be most accurately obtained by the rules of linear perspective, since the intersection with an interposed plane of the rays of light proceeding from every point of such objects may be obtained by the principles of geometry. Linear perspective includes the various kinds of projections, as scenographic, orthographic, ichnographic, stereographic projections, &c. Aerial perspective teaches how to give due diminution to the strength of light, shade, and colours of objects according to their distances, and the quantity of light falling on them, and to the medium through which they are seen. — Isometrical perspective, a kind of perspective on the principles of orthographic projection, by which solids of the form of rectangular parallelepipeds, or such as are reducible to this form, can be presented with their three pair of planes in one figure, which gives a more intelligible idea of their form than can be done by a separate plan and elevation. At the same time, this method admits of their dimensions being measured by a scale as directly as by the usual mode of delineation. As applied to machinery it gives the elevation and ground-plan in one view. It is considered, for such purposes, to be preferable to the methods in common use, as it is easier and simpler in its application.—Oblique or angular perspective is where the plane of the picture is supposed to be at an angle to the side of the principal object in the picture, as a building, for instance.—Parallel perspective, when the plane of the picture is parallel to the side of the principal object.—Perspective plane, the surface on which the object or picture is delineated, or it is the transparent surface or plane through which we may suppose objects to be viewed. It is also termed the Plane of Projection and the Plane of the Picture.—3. A representation of objects in perspective; a picture intended to make an apartment appear larger.—4. View; vista. 'Perspectives of pleasant glades.' Dryden.—5. The seeing or depicting of things in their due proportions and relations.

Perspectively (pér-spek-tiv-ly), adv. 1. According to the rules of perspective.—2.† Optically; as through some optical arrangement.

Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turn'd into a maid. Shak.

Perspectograph (pér-spek-tó-graf), n. An instrument of various forms for obtaining or transferring to a picture the points and outlines of original objects.

Perspectography (pér-spek-tog-ra-fi), n. [E. perspective, and Gr. graphō, to write.] The science or theory of perspective; the art of delineating objects according to the rules of perspective.

Perspicabile (pér-spi-ka-bl), a. [See below.] Discernible. 'The sea . . . to the eye, with out any perspicabile motion.' Sir T. Herbert.

Perspicacious (pér-spi-ká-shus), a. [L. perspicax, perspicax, from perspicio—per, through, and specio, to view, to look at.] 1. Quick-sighted; sharp of sight. 'Perspicacious and quick in seeing.' South.—2. Of acute discernment.

Perspicaciously (pér-spi-ká-shus-ly), adv. In a perspicacious manner.

Perspicaciousness (pér-spi-ká-shus-nes), n. The quality of being perspicacious; acuteness of sight; perspicacity.

Perspicacity (pér-spi-ká-si-ty), n. [L. perspicacitas.] The state or quality of being perspicacious: (a) acuteness of sight; quickness of sight. (b) Acuteness of discernment or understanding; penetration; sagacity; as, a man of great perspicacity.

Perspicacy† (pér-spi-ka-si), n. Perspicacity. B. Jonson.

Perspicience† (pér-spi-shens), n. [L. perspicentia, insight, knowledge of a thing.] The act of looking with sharpness. Bailey.

Perspicil† (pér-spi-sil), n. [L. per, through, and speculum, a glass.] An optical glass; a telescope. B. Jonson. [Rare.]

Perspicuity (pér-spi-kú-ty), n. [L. perspicuitas, from perspicuus, perspicuous, clear. See PERSPICACIOUS.] 1.† The state or quality of being seen through; transparency; clearness; that quality of a substance which renders objects visible through it.—2. The quality of being perspicuous; clearness to mental vision; easiness to be understood; freedom from obscurity or ambiguity; that quality of writing or language which readily presents to the mind of another the precise ideas of the author.

Perspicuity consists in the using of proper terms for the thoughts which a man would have pass from his own mind into that of another. Locke.

SYN. Perspicuousness, plainness, distinctness, clearness, lucidity, intelligibility.

Perspicuous (pér-spi-kú-us), a. [L. perspicuus, clear. See above.] 1.† Capable of being seen through; transparent; translucent. Peacham.—2. Clear to the understanding; that may be clearly understood; not obscure or ambiguous; lucid; as, a perspicuous statement. Shak.

Perspicuously (pér-spi-kú-us-ly), adv. In a perspicuous manner; clearly; plainly; in a manner to be easily understood. Bacon.

Perspicuousness (pér-spi-kú-us-nes), n. The state of being perspicuous; clearness to intellectual vision; plainness; freedom from obscurity.

Perspirability (pér-spi-rá-bil-i-ty), n. The quality of being perspirable.

Perspirable (pér-spi-rá-bl), a. [From L. perspire, to perspire. See PERSPIRE.] 1. Capable of being perspired or evacuated through the pores of the skin.—2.† Emitting perspiration.

Hair cometh not upon the palms of the hands or soles of the feet, which are parts more perspirable. Bacon.

Perspiration (pér-spi-rá-shon), n. [L. perspiratio, from L. perspire, to breathe through—per, through, and spiro, to breathe. See SPIRIT.] 1. The act of perspiring; excretion of watery fluid (sweat) and fatty or sebaceous matters from the surface of the body. It is divided into insensible and sensible, the former being separated in the form of an invisible vapour, the latter so as to become visible by condensation in the form of very little drops adhering to the skin. According to Valentin the quantity of sweat evolved from the skin is nearly 1½ lb. daily; it is at its maximum immediately after taking food, and decreases during digestion. Insensible perspiration is not visible to the naked eye. Its uses are, (1) To liberate from the blood superfluous animal gas, nitrogen, and water. (2) To eliminate the noxious and heterogeneous excrements. (3) To moisten the external surface of the body lest the epidermis and its nervous papillæ be dried up by the atmospheric air, thus at the same time moderating the temperature of the body. And (4) To counterbalance the suppressed pulmonary transpiration.—2. Matter perspired, consisting of water, carbonic acid, saline substances, lactic acid, and some fatty matter.

Perspirative (pér-spi-rá-tiv), a. Performing the act of perspiration. Johnson.

Perspiratory (pér-spi-rá-to-ri), a. Pertaining to perspiration; causing perspiration; perspirative.—Perspiratory ducts, spiral tubes which commence apparently in the corium or true skin, proceed upwards between the papillæ, and terminate by open pores upon the surface of the cuticle.

Perspire (pér-spir'), v. i. pret. perspired; ppr. perspiring. [L. perspire—per, through, and spiro, to breathe.] 1. To evacuate the fluids of the body through the excretories of the skin; to perform excretion by the cuticular pores; to sweat; as, a person perspires freely.—2. To be evacuated or excreted through the excretories of the skin; to exude by or through the skin; as, a fluid perspires.

Perspire (pér-spir'), v. t. pret. & pp. perspired; ppr. perspiring. To emit or evacuate through the excretories of the skin; to give out through external pores.

Firs . . . perspire a fine balsam of turpentine. Smollett.

Perstreperous (pér-strep-ér-us), a. [From L. strepro, to make a great noise—per, intens., and strepro, to make a noise.] Noisy; obstreperous.

You are too perstreperous, sauce-box. Ford.

Perstringe (pér-strinj'), v. t. pret. & pp. perstringed; ppr. perstringing. [L. perstringo—per, through, and stringo, to graze or brush.] 1.† To graze; to glance on.—2. To touch upon; to criticize. 'Gently to perstringe your errors.' De Quincey.

The womanishness of the Church of Rome in this period is perstringed. Dr. H. More.

Persuadable (pér-swád'a-bl), a. Capable of being persuaded.

Persuadably (pér-swád'a-bli), adv. In a persuadable manner; so as to be persuaded.

Persuade (pér-swád'), v. t. pret. & pp. persuaded; ppr. persuading. [L. persuadeo—per, effectively, and suadeo, to advise, urge.] 1. To influence by argument, advice, entreaty, or exhortation; to argue or reason into a certain course of action.

Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian. Acts xxvi. 28.

I should be glad if I could persuade him to write such another critic on anything of mine. Dryden.

2. To advise; to try to influence; to counsel.

Sir Hugh, persuade me not; I will make a Star-chamber matter of it; if he were twenty Sir John Falstoffs he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, Esquire. Shak.

3. To convince by argument or reasons offered; to bring into a certain opinion or belief.

Beloved, we are persuaded better things of you. Heb. vi. 9.

Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. Rom. xiv. 5.

4. To inculcate by argument or exhortation. Jer. Taylor.—SYN. To induce, prevail on, win over, convince, advise, counsel.

Persuade† (pér-swád'), n. Persuasion.

The king's entreats, Persuades of friends, business of state, my honours, Marriage rites, nor ought that can be nam'd, Since Lelia's loss, can move him. Beau. & Fl.

Persuade (pér-swád'), v. i. To use persuasion.

Twenty merchants have all persuaded with him. Shak.

Persuadedly† (pér-swád'ed-ly), adv. In a persuaded manner; assuredly. 'He's our own, surely, nay, most persuadedly.' Ford.

Persuadedeness (pér-swád'ed-nes), n. The state of being persuaded or convinced.

Persuader (pér-swád'ér), n. One who or that which persuades or influences another. 'Hunger and thirst at once, powerful persuaders.' Milton.

Persuasability (pér-swá'zi-bil'i-ty), n. Capability of being persuaded. Hallywell.

Persuasive (pér-swá'zi-bl), a. [L. persuasibilis.] 1. Capable of being persuaded or influenced by reasons offered. Dr. H. More.—2.† Having power to persuade or influence; persuasive. Bale.

Persuasibleness (pér-swá'zi-bl-nes), n. The quality of being persuasive.

Persuasion (pér-swá'zhon), n. [L. persuasio, persuasionis. See PERSUADE.] 1. The act of persuading; the act of influencing by arguments or reasons offered, or by anything that moves the mind or passions, or inclines the will to a determination.

For thou hast all the arts of fine persuasion. Otway.

In agony, she promised that no force, Persuasion, no, nor death could alter her. Tennyson.

2. The state of being persuaded or convinced; settled opinion or conviction.

When we have no other certainty of being in the right but our own persuasion that we are so, this may often be but making one error the gage for another. Dr. H. More.

One in whom persuasion and belief

Had ripened into faith, and faith become

A passionate intuition. Wordsworth.

3. A creed or belief; or a sect or party adhering to a creed or system of opinions; as, men of the same persuasion; all persuasions concur in the measure.

Persuasion, Conviction.—These words agree in expressing an assent of the mind, and they differ thus:—Persuasion is assent founded on what appeals to the feelings and imagination, and has but imperfect proof; conviction is assent founded on satisfactory proofs which appeal to the reason. That which is pleasant persuades; that which is binding convinces. Conviction is certainty; persuasion is ever liable to become doubt. Angus.

Persuasion, Conviction, Faith, Opinion, Belief.—A persuasion may perhaps be an opinion adopted without repugnance; a conviction probably originally meant an opinion which a man struggled against but was compelled to adopt with regret; faith rather implies some degree of personal confidence in and affection for a person on whose authority a proposition is believed; opinion and belief are much more nearly neutral, but opinion has, so to speak, an intellectual, and belief more or less of a moral, complexion. Fraser's Magazine.

Persuasive (pér-swá'ziv), a. Having the power of persuading; influencing the mind or passions; as, persuasive eloquence; persuasive evidence. 'By magic numbers and persuasive sound.' Congreve.

Oh that Fate had let me see

That triumph of the sweet persuasive lyre. Matt. Arnold.

Persuasive (pér-swá'ziv), n. That which persuades; an incitement; an exhortation.

The most flowing rhetoric of words would be but a poor and faint persuasive. South.

Persuasively (pér-swá'ziv-ly), adv. In a persuasive manner; convincingly. Milton.

Persuasiveness (pér-swá'ziv-nes), n. The quality of being persuasive or of having influence on the mind or passions. Hammond.

Persuatory† (pér-swá'zo-ri), a. Having power or tendency to persuade; persuasive. Sir T. Browne.

Persuet (pér-sú'), n. Pursuit. Spenser.

Persulphate (pér-sul'fat), n. That sulphate of a metal which contains the greater relative quantity of acid.

Persultation (pér-sul-tá-shon), n. [L. persulto, to leap through, from per, through, and salto, to leap.] In med. exudation, as of blood in the form of dew at the surface of the skin or any membrane; sweating of blood.

Persway† (pér-swá'), v. t. To soften; to mitigate; to allay; to assuage. B. Jonson.

Pert (pért), a. [O. Fr. apert, L. apertus, open, free, hence forward, impudent. But the sense may have been affected by W. pert, trim, spruce, if this word is not from the English. More probably there are two words under one form, the one from the Latin, the other from Welsh. Comp. perk.] 1.† Open; evident; plain. Spenser.—2. Lively; brisk; smart.

Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth. Shak.

And on the lawny sands and shelves,

Tripp the pert faeries, and the dapper elves. Milton.

3. Forward; saucy; bold; forwardly loquacious; indecorously free.

A lady bids me in a very pert manner mind my own affairs. Admission.

Pert† (pért), v.i. To behave with pertness; to be saucy.

Hagar perted against Sarah, and lifted herself up against her superiors. Bp. Gauden.

Pertain (pér-tân), v.i. [L. pertinere—per, intens., and teneo, to hold tightly, to hold, whence also tenure, contain, obtain, retain, &c. See TENURE.] 1. To belong; to be the property, right, duty, belonging, or appurtenance of; to appertain: followed by to. 'In those things which pertain to God.' Rom. xv. 17. 'To Eleazar pertaineth the oil.' Num. iv. 16. 'All honours that pertain unto the crown of France.' Shak. 'More than pertains to feats of broil and battle.' Shak.—2. To have relation to; to have a bearing on or reference to: with to.

These words pertain unto us at this time as they pertained to them at their time. Latiniser.

Perturbation (pér-ter'e-brá'shon), n. [L. per, through, and tervatio, to bore.] The act of boring through. [Rare.]

Perthite (pér'thít), n. A variety of felspar, from Perth, in Upper Canada. Worcester.

Pertinacious (pér-ti-ná'shús), a. [L. pertinax—per, intens., and teneo, to hold.] 1. Holding or adhering to any opinion, purpose, or design with obstinacy; obstinate; perversely resolute or persistent; as, pertinacious in opinion; pertinacious in opposing some reform.

He had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence and less abilities. Iz. Walton.

2. Resolute; firm; constant; steady. Diligence is a steady, constant, pertinacious study. South.

SYN. Obstinate, stubborn, inflexible, unyielding, resolute, determined, firm, constant, steady.

Pertinaciously (pér-ti-ná'shús-ly), adv. In a pertinacious manner; obstinately; with firm or perverse adherence to opinion or purpose.

They deny that freedom to me which they pertinaciously challenge to themselves. Eikon Basilike.

Pertinaciousness (pér-ti-ná'shús-nes), n. Same as Pertinacity. Jer. Taylor.

Pertinacity (pér-ti-ná'si-ti), n. [L. pertinacia. See above.] 1. The state or quality of being pertinacious; firm or unyielding adherence to opinion or purpose; obstinacy; as, to cling with pertinacity to an opinion or intention.—2. Resolution; constancy.

Pertinacy† (pér-ti-na-si), n. [L. pertinacia.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; persistency; resoluteness; steadiness.

St. Gorgonia prayed with passion and pertinacy till she obtained relief. Jer. Taylor.

Pertinately (pér-ti-nát), a. Obstinate. Joye. Pertinately† (pér-ti-nát-ly), adv. Obstinately. Joye.

Pertinence, Pertinency (pér-ti-nens, pér-ti-nen-si), n. Quality of being pertinent; justness of relation to the subject or matter in hand; fitness; appositeness; suitability.

I have shown the fitness and pertinency of the apostle's discourse to the persons he addressed. Bentley.

The courtiers address him; his answers surprise by their pertinency and depth. Carlyle.

Pertinent (pér-ti-nent), a. [L. pertinens, ppr. of pertinere, to pertain, be applicable to.] 1. Related to the subject or matter in hand; just to the purpose; adapted to the end proposed; appropriate; apposite; not foreign to the question.

I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this business. Bacon.

2. Regarding; concerning; belonging. 'Anything pertinent unto faith and religion.' Hooker. [Rare.]—SYN. Apposite, relevant, suitable, appropriate, fit, proper.

Pertinent (pér-ti-nent), n. In Scots law, a part of anything; a term used in charters and dispositions in conjunction with parts; as, lands are disposed with parts and pertinents.

Pertinently (pér-ti-nent-ly), adv. In a pertinent manner; appositely; to the purpose.

Be modest and reserved in the presence of thy betters, speaking little, answering pertinently. Jer. Taylor.

Pertinentness (pér-ti-nent-nes), n. The quality of being pertinent; appositeness.

Pertingent† (pér-tin-jent), a. [L. pertingens, ppr. of pertinere, to extend to, from the prefix per, through, and tango, to touch, to arrive at.] Reaching to or touching completely. Bailey.

Perturbation (pér-tərb-bá'shon), n. [L. perturbatio. See PERTURB.] 1. The act of perturbing or the state of being perturbed; disturbance; disorder; especially, disquiet of mind; restlessness or want of tranquillity of mind; commotion of the passions. 'Without perturbation hear me speak.' B. Jonson. 'Long dissensions . . . ready to break forth into new perturbations and calamities.' Bacon.

Love was not in their looks, either to God Or to each other; but apparent guilt, And shame, and perturbation, and despair. Milton.

2. Cause of disquiet. 'O polished perturbation, golden care!' Shak.—Perturbations of the planets, in astron. their orbital irregularities or deviations from their regular elliptic orbits. These deviations arise, in the case of the primary planets, from the mutual gravitations of these planets towards each other, which derange their elliptic motions round the sun; and in that of the secondaries, partly from the mutual gravitation of the secondaries of the same system, similarly deranging their elliptic motions round their primary, and partly from the unequal attraction of the sun on them and on their primary. The forces which cause these perturbations or deviations are called the perturbing forces, and the determination of their effect on each orbit is the great problem of physical astronomy. The planets are subject to two kinds of perturbations; one kind, depending upon their positions with regard to each other, begins from zero, increases to a maximum, decreases, and becomes zero again when the planets return to the same relative positions. All these changes being accomplished in comparatively short periods, are denominated periodic inequalities. The inequalities of the other kind are entirely independent of the relative positions of the planets. They depend upon the relative positions of the orbits alone, whose forms and places in space are thus altered by very minute quantities in immense periods of time, and the deviations are therefore called secular inequalities. Of the planetary perturbations, the most important in a practical point of view are those which arise from the mutual attractions of the three bodies, the sun, the earth, and the moon.

Perturbator (pér-tərb-át-ér), n. One who perturbs or raises commotion. 'The perturbators of the peace of Italy.' Ld. Herbert.

Perturbatrix (pér-tərb-át-riks), n. A female that perturbs; a woman who breaks the peace.

Petechial (pe-tek'i-āl), a. In med. having livid spots or petechie.—A petechial fever is a malignant fever accompanied with purple spots on the skin.

Peter-boat (pe'tēr-bōt), n. A fishing-boat; a small boat shaped alike at stem and stern, and which may be rowed with either end foremost at pleasure.

Peterel (pe'tēr-el), n. A petrel.

Peterero (pe-te-rē-ro'), n. Same as Pederero. Peter-man (pe'tēr-man), n. [From the occupation of St. Peter.] A fisherman. [An old term used on the Thames.]

Yet his skin is too thick; 't would make good boots for a Peter-man to catch salmon in. Eastward Hoe.

Peter's-pence (pē'tēr-z-pens), n. A tribute originally collected in several of the western kingdoms of Europe, and offered to the popes, who are considered by the Roman Catholics as the successors of St. Peter. The first idea of an annual tribute seems to have originated from England before the Norman conquest, and appears to have been collected from every householder about St. Peter's Day for the support of an English college or hospice in Rome. It was finally abolished by Elizabeth. This contribution was sometimes called also Rome-scot. After the French revolution of 1848, and more particularly after the total annexation of the Papal States to the kingdom of Italy, strenuous efforts have been made to revive a voluntary annual tribute under this name in various parts of Europe, and these efforts have met with considerable success in France, Belgium, England, and Ireland. Called also Peter-pence.

Peter's-fish (pē'tēr-z-fish), n. A name given to the haddock, from the spots on either side being supposed to be the marks of St. Peter's fingers, when he caught that fish for the tribute. It is also sometimes given to the sea-bream (Pagellus) and the John Dory (Zeus faber), both having similar marks.

Petersham (pē'tēr-sham), n. [After Lord Petersham, who set the fashion of wearing it.] 1. The name of a great-coat formerly fashionable.—2. The heavy, rough-napped woollen cloth of which such greatcoats were made.

Petiolar (pet'i-ō-lēr), a. In bot. pertaining to a petiole, or proceeding from it; growing on or supported by a petiole; as, a petiolar tendril; a petiolar bud; a petiolar gland.

Petiolary (pet'i-ō-la-ri), a. Same as Petiolar.

Petiolate, Petioled (pet'i-ō-lāt, pet'i-ōld), a. Having a petiole; as, a petiolate leaf.

Petiole (pet'i-ōl), n. [Fr., from L. petiolus, a dim. from pes, pedis, a foot.] In bot. a leaf-stalk; the foot-stalk of a leaf which connects the blade with the branch or stem.

Petiolulate (pet'i-ō-lūl-āt), a. In bot. a term applied to a leaflet supported by its own petiolule or foot-stalk.

Petiolule (pet'i-ōl-ūl), n. [A dim. of petiole.] In bot. a little or partial petiole.

such as belong to the leaflets of compound leaves.

Petit (pet'i), a. [Fr.; a word of uncertain origin; comp. O.L. petilus, thin, slender; and W. piwa, small, pid, a point.] Petty; inferior. The spelling petty for petty is used in sundry legal phrases—Petit constable, an inferior civil officer subordinate to the high constable.—Petit jury, a jury of twelve freeholders who are impanelled to try causes at the bar of a court; so called in distinction from the grand-jury, which tries the truth of indictments.—Petit larceny, the stealing of goods of the value of twelve pence, or under that amount: opposed to grand larceny. The distinction between petit and grand larceny is now abolished.—Petit serjeantry, in Eng. law, the tenure of lands of the crown, by the service of rendering annually some implement of war, as a bow, an arrow, a sword, lance, &c.—Petit treason, the crime of killing a person, to whom the offender owes duty or subjection, as for a servant to kill his master, a wife her husband, or the like. As a name for a specific offence the term is no longer used, such crimes being now deemed murder only.

Petit-baume (pē'tē-bōm), n. [Fr. petit, little, and baume, balsam.] The name given in the West Indies to a liquor obtained from Croton balsamiferum.

Petition (pē-tish'on), n. [L. petitio, petitionis, from peto, petitum, to seek, ask, make for, attack.] 1. An entreaty, supplication, or prayer; a solemn or formal supplication, as one addressed to the Supreme Being, or to a superior in rank or power; also a particular request or article among several in a prayer. 'This last petition heard of all her prayer.' Dryden.

Let my life be given at my petition and my people at my request. Est. vii. 3.

I will go and sit beside the doors, And make a wild petition night and day. Tennyson.

2. A formal written request or supplication; particularly, a written supplication from an inferior to a superior, either to a single person clothed with power, or to a legislative or other body, soliciting some favour, grant, right, or mercy.—3. The paper containing such a supplication or solicitation. The term is applied to sundry documentary applications employed in legal proceedings, as a petition or application in writing addressed to the lord-chancellor or the master of the rolls, a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy or for a divorce.—Petition of right, (a) a petition for obtaining possession or restitution from the crown of either real or personal property, the petitioner suggesting such a right as controverts the title of the crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition. (b) In Eng. hist. a parliamentary declaration of the rights and liberties of the people, assented to by Charles I. in the beginning of his reign.

Petition (pē-tish'on), v.t. 1. To make a request or prayer to; to ask from; to solicit; to entreat.

The mother petitioned her goddess to bestow on them the greatest gift that could be given.

Addison.

2. To present a written or printed petition or supplication to, as to a sovereign.

Petitionarily (pē-tish'on-a-ri-li), adv. 1. In a petitionary manner.—2. By way of begging the question. Sir T. Browne. [Rare.]

Petitionary (pē-tish'on-a-ri), a. 1. Pertaining to, containing or involving a petition; of the nature of a petition or supplication. 'Petitionary prayer.' Hooker.

Clasp hands and that petitionary grace
Of sweet seventeen subdued me ere she spoke.

Tennyson.

2. Offering a petition; supplicatory.

Pardon Rome and thy petitionary countrymen.

Shak.

Petitionee (pē-tish'on-ē), n. One who is petitioned or addressed by petition.

Petitioner (pē-tish'on-ēr), n. 1. One that presents a petition, either verbal or written. 2. In Eng. hist. an opponent of the court party in the time of Charles II.; an addresser (which see).

Petitio principii (pē-tish'i-ō prin-sip'i-i), n. [L., a begging of the principle or question.] In log. a species of vicious reasoning, which consists in tacitly assuming the proposition to be proved as a premiss of the syllogism by which it is to be proved; the taking of a thing for true and drawing conclusions from it as such, when it requires to be proved before any conclusions can be deduced from it; begging the question.

Petit-maitre (pē-tē-mā-tr), n. [Fr., a little master.] A spruce fellow that dangles about females; a fop; a coxcomb.

Petitory (pē-ti-to-ri), a. [L. petitorius. See PETITION.] Petitioning; soliciting; begging.

An hypothesis is probable . . . in proportion as it involves nothing petitory, occult, supernatural.

Sir W. Hamilton.

—Petitory actions, in Scots law, actions by which something is sought to be decreed by the judge in consequence of a right of property, or a right of credit in the pursuer. All actions on personal contracts by which the grantor has become bound to pay or to perform, are petitory actions.

Petiveria (pē-ti-vē-ri-a), n. [Named by Linnaeus in honour of J. Petiver, F.R.S., a London apothecary.] A genus of plants, natural order Phytolaccaceae. The species are West Indian herbs, and in pastures are troublesome weeds, giving an unpleasant flavour to the milk of cows which feed upon them. P. alliacea (guinea-hen weed), which is found also throughout South America, has a strong smell of garlic, and its juices are excessively acrid.

Petong (pē-tong), n. Same as Packfong.

Petralogy (pē-tral'o-jī), n. Same as Petrology.

Petraria (pē-trā-ri), n. [Sp. petraria, from L. and Gr. petra, a stone.] A machine used by the ancients for throwing stones.

Petrel (pē-tēr), n. Nitre; saltpetre. 'Powder made of impure and greasy petre.' Sir T. Browne.

Petrean (pē-trē'an), a. [L. petra, a rock.] Pertaining to rock or stone. Faber. [Rare.]

Petrel (pē-trēl), n. [Dim. of Peter, in allusion to St. Peter's walking on the sea.] The common name of the web-footed oceanic birds of the family Procellariidae, closely resembling the gulls, but having a rudimentary hinder toe, and the upper mandible strongly hooked. The petrels are nocturnal or crepuscular in their habits, breed in holes in the rocks, lay but one egg, and are almost all of small size and more or less sombre plumage. They are found in every part of the world, on the ocean at great distances from land, and generally in stormy weather. The smaller species are well-known to sailors under the name of storm birds, and Mother Carey's chickens. The term stormy petrel is more exclusively applied to the Thalassidroma pelagica; the fulmar petrel is Procellaria glacialis. The stormy petrel seems to run in the remarkable manner above the surface of the sea, where it picks up its food, which generally consists of small fish, crustaceans, molluscs, floating algae, &c. The appearance of these birds is considered by seamen to presage a storm. See PROCELLARIÆ.

Stormy Petrel (Thalassidroma pelagica).

Petrel, t. n. The same as Peytrel, or Poitrel.

Petrescence (pē-tres'ens), n. The process of changing into stone. Maunder.

Petrescent (pē-tres'ent), a. [Gr. petros, L. petra, a stone.] Converting into stone; changing into stony hardness. Boyle; Kirwan.

Petrification (pē-tri-fak'shon), n. [See PETRIFY.] 1. The state of being petrified; the process of changing into stone; the conversion of any organic matter (animal or vegetable) into stone or a body of stony hardness.

When the water in which wood is lodged is slightly impregnated with petrescent particles, the petrification very slowly takes place. Kirwan.

2. That which is converted into stone; organized matter rendered hard by depositions of a stony substance in its cavities; a fossil.—3. Fig. the state of being petrified, fixed, or paralyzed, as by fear, astonishment, and the like.

Petrifactive (pē-tri-fak'tiv), a. 1. Pertaining to petrification. Sir T. Browne.—2. Having power to petrify or to convert vegetable or animal substances into stone.

Petrifiable (pē-tri-fi-a-bl), a. Capable of being petrified.

Petrific (pē-tri'fik), a. Having power to petrify or to convert into stone. 'Death with his mace petrifies.' Milton. 'The petrific mace of the fell destroyer.' De Quincey.

Petrificate (pē-tri-fi-kat), v.t. To petrify. Bp. Hall.

Petrification (pē-tri-fi-kā'shon), n. 1. The act or process of petrifying.—2. That which is petrified; a petrification.—3. Obscurity; calousness. Hallswell.

Petrify (pē-tri-fi), v.t. pret. and pp. petrified; ppr. petrifying. [L. petra, a stone or rock, and facio, to make.] 1. To convert to stone or stony substance, as animal or vegetable matter.

North of Quito, there is a river that petrifies any sort of wood or leaves. Kirwan.

2. Fig. (a) to make callous or obdurate; as, to petrify the heart. 'And petrify a genius to a dunce.' Pope. (b) To paralyze or stupefy with fear or amazement; as, to petrify one with astonishment.

The poor petrified journeyman, quite unconscious of what he was doing in blind, passive self-surrender to panic, absolutely descended both flights of stairs. De Quincey.

Petrify (pē-tri-fi), v.i. To become stone or of a stony hardness, as organic matter by means of calcareous or other deposits in its cavities; hence, to change into lifeless hardness or rigidity.

Like Niobe we marble grow,

And petrify with grief.

Dryden.

Petrine (pē-trin), a. Relating to St. Peter; as, the Petrine epistles.—Petrine liturgy, the liturgy used at Rome, which tradition maintained to have been drawn up by St. Peter.

Petrobrusian (pē-ro-brū'zi-an), n. A follower of Peter (Pierre) de Bruys, a Provençal, who in the beginning of the twelfth century preached against the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, the use of churches, altars, crucifixes, relics, &c., prayers for the dead, and the doctrine of the real presence. Rev. Orby Shipley.

Petrogal (pē-trog'a-lē), n. [Gr. petros, a rock, and galē, a weasel.] A genus of the kangaroo family, frequenting the most precipitous rocky mountains during the day, only descending into the valleys to feed in the early morning or late in the evening. The brush-tailed rock wallaby (P. penicillata) is exceedingly agile, leaping from rock to rock like a chamois, and alighting in safety on perilously narrow ledges. It is about 3½ feet long, gregarious in its habits. Its flesh is excellent. A very graceful little species is the short-eared rock kangaroo (P. brachiotis), also frequenting the most inaccessible rocks.

Petrographer (pē-trog'ra-fēr), n. One who studies petrography; one versed in the study of rocks.

Petrographic, Petrographical (pē-tro-graf'ik, pē-tro-graf'ik-al), a. Of or pertaining to petrography.

While no petrographical system could be established without the aid of chemical analysis, the microscope had now become of the most essential service in the study of rocks. Getkie.

Petrography (pē-trog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. petros, a stone, and grapho, to write, to describe.] 1. The art of writing on stone.—2. The study of rocks; a scientific description of rocks; specifically, that department of geology which investigates the mineralogical constitution of rocks; petrology.

Petrol† (pē-trōl), n. Same as Petroleum.

Petroleum (pē-trō'lēn), n. A liquid substance obtained by distilling petroleum. It is a carburetted hydrogen.

Petroleum (pē-trō'lē-um), n. [From L. petra, rock, and oleum, oil.] A variety of naphtha, called also rock or mineral oil, a liquid inflammable substance exuding from the earth, in some places collected on the surface of the water in wells, in other places obtained in great quantities by boring. It is essentially composed of a great number of hydrocarbons. It chiefly flows from beds associated with coal strata. It is found in enormous quantities in various parts of the United States, Canada, Russia (Baku), &c. It yields kerosene and paraffin oil, so extensively employed for illuminating purposes, also solid paraffin for candles, &c., vaseline, and lubricating oil; is much employed as liquid fuel for steam engines, and is sometimes used in medicine.

Petroleum-burner (pē-trō'lē-um-bēr-ēr), n. A burner contrived to vaporize and consume liquid petroleum fed to it from a reservoir. E. H. Knight.

Petroline (pē-trō-lin), n. A solid substance, a mixture of hydrocarbons obtained by distilling the petroleum of Rangoon: analogous to paraffin.

Petrological (pē-trō-loj'ik-al), a. Of or pertaining to petrology. Nature.

Petrologist (pē-trō-lo-jist), n. A student of petrology, or one versed in the mineralogical constitution of rocks.

There we have the well-known quartz porphyry of Botzen, and there we have quartziferous lavas peculiarly interesting to the petrologist as examples of rocks which exhibit the very rare association of a plagioclasic felspar with free quartz.

Nineteenth Century.

Petrology (pē-trō'l'o-jī), n. [Gr. petros, a rock, and logos, a treatise.] The study of rocks; that branch of geology which determines the constitution of rocks by investigating the chemical composition of the separate mineral ingredients of which they consist, as well as their character in regard to crystallization and the like. Such investigations are made both by chemical analysis and the aid of the microscope. Spelled also Petrology.

Petromyzon (pē-trō-mī'zon), n. [Gr. petros, a stone, and myzō, to suck.] A genus of fishes whose form and motion resemble those of the eel; the lampreys. They are now usually regarded as a family called Petromyzonidae, or more commonly Marsipobranchii. These fishes constitute the section Cyclostomi or Cyclostomata, and are distinguished by their imperfectly developed skeleton, their want of pectoral and ventral fins, combined with an eel-like form of body. The mouth is circular, and the tongue is so formed that by its movement in the mouth it acts as a piston, and enables the animal to attach itself by suction to any foreign body. See LAMPREY.

Petromyzonidae (pē-trō-mī-zon'ī-dē), n. pl. See PETROMYZON.

Petronel (pē-trō-nel), n. [O. Fr. petrinal, poitrinal, from L. pectoralis (Fr. poitrine, the breast), from L. pectus, pectoris, the breast: so called from being discharged with the stock placed against the breast.] A kind of carbine or large horseman's pistol.

He made his brave horse like a whirlwind bear him
Among the combatants, and in a moment
Discharged his petronel.

Beau, & Fl.

Petro-occipital (pē-trō-ok-sip'i-tal), a. [L. petra, a rock, and E. occipital.] In anat. belonging to the petrous portion of the tem-

ch, chain; ch, Sc. lock; g, go; j, job;

w, wig; wh, whig; zh, azure.—See KEY.

poral bone and to the occipital bone.—Petro-occipital suture, a suture or deep groove formed by the junction of the petrous portion of the temporal bone with the occipital bone. Dunghison.

Petroselinum (pet'rō-sē-lī'nūm), n. [Gr. petra, rock, and selinon, parsley.] A genus of umbelliferous plants, of which one species, P. sativum (common parsley), grows wild on rocks and old walls, and is extensively cultivated, being highly esteemed as a culinary herb. See PARSLEY.

Petrosilex (pet'rō-sī'leks), n. [L. petra, a stone, and silex, flint.] Rock stone; rock flint, or compact felspar.

Petrosiliceous (pet'rō-sī-lī'shus), a. Consisting of petrosilex; as, petrosiliceous breccias.

Petro-sphenoidal (pet'rō-sfē-noid'al), a. [L. petra, a rock, and E. sphenoidal.] In anat. belonging to the petrous portion of the temporal bone and to the sphenoid bone.—Petro-sphenoidal suture, the small suture formed by the anterior edge of the petrous portion of the temporal bone and the posterior edge of the sphenoid. Dunghison.

Petrous (pē'trus), a. [L. petrosus, from petra, a stone.] 1. Like stone; hard; stony. 2. In anat. of or pertaining to that portion of the temporal bone in which the internal organs of hearing are situated.

Pettah (pet'tā), n. [Tamil word.] The suburb of a fortified town; the town outside a fort. [Anglo-Indian.]

Pettichaps (pet'ti-chaps), n. Same as Pettychaps.

Petticoat (pet'ti-kōt), n. [From petty, short, small, and coat.] 1. A loose under garment worn by females, depending from the waist, and covering the lower limbs. 'Like fringe upon a petticoat.' Shak.
Her feet, beneath her petticoat,
Like little mice stole in and out. Suckling.

Hence—2. A woman. 'Disarmed—defied by a petticoat. . . . What! afraid of a woman!' W. H. Ainsworth.—Petticoat government, female government, either political or domestic; female home rule.

Pettifog (pet'ti-fog), v.i. pret. & pp. pettified; ppr. pettifying. [Pettily, and Prov. E. fog, to seek gain by mean practices.] To play the pettifogger; to do small business as a lawyer. Butler.

Pettifogger (pet'ti-fog'ēr), n. An inferior attorney or lawyer who is employed in small or mean business.

Your pettifoggers damn their souls
To share with knaves in cheating foals. Hudibras.

Pettifoggery (pet'ti-fog'ēr-i), n. The practice of a pettifogger; tricks; quibbles. 'Quirks of law, and pettifoggeries.' Barrow.

Pettifogulize (pet'ti-fog'u-līz), v.i. To act as a pettifogger; to use petty and contemptible means. 'To pettifogulize, that is, to find evasions for any purpose in a trickster's minute tortuosities of construction.' De Quincy. [Rare and humorous.]

Pettily (pet'ti-lī), adv. In a petty manner.

Pettiness (pet'ti-nes), n. The state of being petty; smallness; littleness.

course of the voyage, are not considered as a loss, but as part of the necessary expense.—Petty bag, formerly an office in chancery in England, the clerk of which had the drawing up of parliamentary writs, writs of scire facias, conged d'élire for bishops, &c.—Petty-cash book, a book in which small receipts and payments are entered. For petty constable, petty larceny, petty treason, &c., the common form of writing these terms, see the legal form under PETIT.—Petty officer, an officer in the royal navy whose rank corresponds with that of a non-commissioned officer in the army. Petty officers are appointed and can be degraded by the captain of the vessel.—Petty session. See SESSION.—SYN. Little, diminutive, inconsiderable, inferior, trifling, trivial, unimportant, frivolous.

Pettychaps (pet'ti-chaps), n. A name given to three or four small species of warblers of the genus Sylvia, such as the S. trochilus and the S. sibilatrix. The latter, from its note sometimes resembling the creak of a grasshopper, is often also called the grasshopper warbler.

Petty-ric (pet'ti-ris), n. See QUINOA.

Petty-whin (pet'ti-whin), n. A British plant of the genus Genista, the G. anglica, otherwise called Needle Green-weed. It is a small shrub with pale yellow flowers and simple thorns, growing on heathy grounds.

Petulance, Petulancy (pet'u-lans, pet'u-lan-si), n. [L. petulantia, Fr. petulance. See PETULANT.] Freakish passion; peevishness; pettishness; sauciness.

That which looked like pride in some, and like petulance in others, would, by experience in affairs and conversation amongst men, be in time wrought off. Clarendon.

There appears in our age a pride and petulance in youth, zealous to cast off the sentiments of their fathers and teachers. Watts.

She shook from fear, and for her fault she wept
Of petulance. Tennyson.

—Peevishness, Petulance. Peevishness implies more permanence of a sour fretful temper, petulance more temporary or capricious irritation.

Petuntse, Petuntze (pē-tun'tsē, pē-tun'tzē), n. The Chinese name for what is thought by geologists to be a partially decomposed granite used in the manufacture of porcelain.

Petworth-marble (pet'wēth-mār-bl), n. Also called Sussex-marble, from being worked at Petworth in Sussex; a variously coloured limestone occurring in the weald-clay, and composed of the remains of fresh-water shells.

Petzite (pet'zit), n. An ore of silver and tellurium, consisting of about 61½ parts of the former to 38 parts of the latter, with traces of gold, and so called in honour of the chemist Petz, who analysed it. Called also Telluride of Silver.

Peucedanin, Peucedanine (pū-sē'da-nin), ($C_{12}H_{16}O_6$). A non-azotized vegetable principle discovered in the root of Peucedanum officinale, or sea sulphur-wort. It forms delicate white prisms, fusible, soluble in alcohol and ether. It is neutral.

Peucedanum (pū-sē'da-num), n. [Gr. peuke- danon, a bitter umbelliferous plant like hog's-fennel, from peukē, a pine; so named because of its strong resinous smell.] A genus of plants, nat. order Umbelliferae. P. officinale (hog's fennel or sea sulphur-wort) is a British plant, growing in salt marshes, and remarkable for its large umbels of yellow flowers and its long and extremely narrow leaflets. The whole plant, especially the root, has a strong sulphurous smell, and the latter yields a resinous substance, reckoned stimulant, but of dangerous internal use.

Peutingerman (pū-tin-gē'ri-an), a. A term applied to a table of the roads of the ancient Roman world, written on parchment, and found in a library at Speyer in the fifteenth century. It was so named from Conrad Peuting, a native of Augsburg, who was the first to make it generally known. It is supposed to have been constructed about A.D. 226.

Pew (pū), n. [O.Fr. pui, Fr. puoi, a raised place; from L. podium, an elevated place, a balcony, a front balcony in an amphitheatre where the emperor and other distinguished persons sat, from Gr. podion, from podos, the foot.] 1. A fixed seat in a church, inclosed and separated from those adjoining by partitions; or an inclosure containing more than one seat. Pews, as now made, are generally narrow, and long enough to accommodate several persons.—2.† A wooden erection of considerable height, in the shape of a square or parallelogram, formerly used by lawyers, money-lenders, &c.

To this brave man (a scrivener) the knight repairs
For counsel in his law affairs,
And found him mounted in his pew.
With books and money placed for chew. Hudibras.

Pew (pū), v.t. To furnish with pews.

Pewet (pē-wet), n. Same as Pewit.

Pewfellow (pū-fel-lō), n. One who sits in the same pew in church; hence, a companion. Shak.

Pewit (pē-wit), n. [From cry.] 1. The laughing-gull or mire-crow.—2. The lapwing.

Pewit-gull (pē-wit-gul), n. The mire-crow or laughing gull.

Pew-opener (pū'ō-pn-ēr), n. An attendant in a church who opens the pew doors for the congregation.

Pewter (pū'tēr), n. [O.Fr. peutre, peautre, plautre, D. peuter, also speuter, Sp. petre, It. petiro, peuter. Same as Spelter (which see).] 1. An alloy of tin and lead, or of tin with such proportions of lead, zinc, bismuth, antimony, or copper as experience has shown to be most conducive to the improvement of its hardness and colour. One of the finest sorts of pewter is composed of 100 parts of tin to 17 parts of antimony, while the common pewter of which beer-mugs and other vessels are made consists of 4 parts of tin and 1 of lead. The kind of pewter of which tea-pots are made (called Britannia metal) is said to be an alloy of equal parts of tin, brass, antimony, and bismuth; but it is believed that the tin greatly preponderates. The sorts known in commerce are plate, triple, and ley pewter. Pewter was formerly in extensive use in domestic utensils or vessels, but being a soft composition and easily melted is now less used.—2. A vessel or vessels or utensils made of pewter, as plates, tankards, beer-pots, and other vessels.

Valance of Venice gold in needlework,
Pewter, and brass, and all things that belong
To house or house-keeping. Shak.

Pewter (pū'tēr), a. Relating to or made of pewter. 'Pewter dishes with water in them.' Bacon.

Pewterer (pū'tēr-ēr), n. One whose occupation is to make vessels and utensils of pewter. 'The motion of a pewterer's hammer.' Shak.

Pewtery (pū'tēr-i), a. Belonging to or resembling pewter; as, a pewtery taste.

Pexity† (peks'i-ti), n. [L. pexis, from pezus, woolly, pp. of pecto, to comb.] The nap of cloth.

Peyer's Glands (pē'ēr-z glandz), n. pl. In anat. the clustered glands of the intestines, first discovered by Peyer, a Swiss anatomist.

Peytreil†, n. [See POITREL.] The breastplate of a horse. Chaucer.

Peziza (pe-zī'za), n. [From Gr. pezis, a mushroom (without a stalk).] A genus of fungi, including numerous species, some of which are remarkable for their regular cup-like shape and their deep colours.

Pezizoid (pez'i-zoid), a. Resembling a fungus of the genus Peziza; having a cup-like shape.

Fäte, fär, fat, fäll; mē, met, hér; pine, pin; nôte, not, möve; tübe, tub, hull; oil, pound; ü, Sc. abyme; ý, Sc. fey.

Pezophaps (pez'ô-faps), n. [Gr. pezos, on foot, and phaps, a pigeon.] The generic name of the solitary (P. solitaria), a large rasorial bird, closely allied to the dodo, having, however, longer legs, and the bill less strongly arched. The wings were rudimentary and useless for flight. It was found in the small island of Rodriguez, about 300 miles east of Mauritius, but became extinct about the end of the seventeenth century.

Pezoporinæ (pez'ô-pô-rî'nê), n. pl. [Gr. pezoporos, going on foot, from pezos, on foot, and poreuô, to go.] The ground-parakeets, a sub-family of the Psittacidae. The elegant green-and-black-marked Australian parrot or parakeet, called, from its beauty, Pezoporos formosus, belongs to this sub-family.

Pfahlbauten (pfal-bou'ten), n. pl. [G. pfahl, a pale, and bauten, dwellings, from bauen, to build.] The name given by German archaeologists to prehistoric lake-habitations. See LACUSTRINE.

Pfennig, Pfennig (pfen'ig, pfen'ning), n. [Akin penny (which see).] A small copper coin current in Germany, the hundredth part of a mark. Ten pfennige of the present German currency are worth a little over an English penny.

Phaca (fâ'ka), n. [Gr. phakê, a lentil.] A genus of leguminous plants, including the bastard vetch.

Phacochere, Phacochere (fak'ô-kêr), n. [Gr. phakos, a lentil-shaped wart, from phakê, a lentil, and choiros, a hog.] The wart-hog of Africa, a pachydermatous mammal of the genus Phacocherus, akin to the swine, characterized by a large wart-like excrescence on each side of the face. They are most formidable animals, the tusks of the male projecting 8 or 9 inches beyond the lips, and forming most terrible weapons. P. ethiopicus or Pallasii is known under the Dutch name of the vlake-vark. P. Eliani, the halluf or haroja, is called also the Abyssinian phacochere or Ethiopian wild-boar.

Phacops (fak'ops), n. [Gr. phakê, a lentil, and ops, eye.] A genus of fossil trilobites. P. latifrons is characteristic of the Devonian formation, and is all but world-wide in its distribution.

Phanogam (fê'nô-gam), n. [Gr. phainô, to appear, and gamos, marriage.] A Phanerogamous plant: opposed to cryptogam.

Phanogamia (fê'nô-gâ-mi-a), n. pl. Same as Phanerogamia.

Phanogamous (fê-nô-gâ-mus), a. Having manifest flowers; phanerogamous.

Phanomenon (fê-nom'ê-non). See PHENOMENON.

Phaeton (fâ'e-ton), n. [L. Phaethon, Gr. Phaethôn, a mythological character, who one day obtained leave from his father Helios (the Sun) to drive the chariot of the sun, but being unable to restrain the horses Zeus struck him with a thunderbolt and hurled him headlong into the river Po.] 1. An open, four-wheeled carriage, usually drawn by two horses.—2. A genus of oceanic birds; the tropic bird (which see).

Phaetoninæ (fê-tô-nî'nê), n. pl. [See above.] The tropic birds, a sub-family of oceanic natatorial birds, inhabiting intertropical regions. They are found far out at sea, fly high and with great rapidity. They have short feeble feet and long pointed tail-feathers.

Phagedena, Phagedæna (faj-ê-dê'na), n. [Gr. phagedaina, from phagô, to eat.] A spreading obstinate ulcer; an ulcer which eats and corrodes the neighbouring parts.

Phagedenic, Phagedenic (faj-ê-den'ik, faj-ê-dê'nik), a. [Gr. phagedainikos, from phagedaina.] Pertaining to phagedena; of the nature and character of phagedena; as, a phagedenic ulcer or medicine.

Phagedenic, Phagedenic (faj-ê-den'ik, faj-ê-dê'nik), n. in med. an application that causes the absorption or the death and sloughing of fungous flesh.

Phagedenical (faj-ê-den'ik-al), a. Same as Phagedenic. Wiseman.

Phagedenous, Phagedænous (faj-ê-dê'nus), a. Causing absorption of the flesh, as in phagedena; of the nature of phagedena.

Phalacrocorax (fa-la-kro'kô-raks), n. [Gr. phalakros, bald-headed, and korax, a crow, a raven.] The cormorant, a genus of palmiped birds. See CORMORANT.

Phalacroctis (fal-a-kro'ctis), n. [Gr. phalakros, bald.] Baldness of the head; calvities.

Phalæna (fa-lê'na), n. [Gr. phalana, a moth.] The genus in which Linnaeus included the moths, now divided into several genera.

Phalangeal, Phalangeal (fa-lan'gal, fal-lan'jê-al), a. [See PHALANX.] Belonging to the phalanges or small bones of the fingers and toes.

Phalange (fa-lan'jê), n. [Gr. phalanx.] 1. In anat. a phalanx; one of the small bones of the fingers and toes.

Here is a digit with its full number of phalanges, and there a digit of which one phalange has been arrested in its growth. H. Spencer.

2. In bot. a collection of several stamens joined more or less by their filaments.

Phalangean (fa-lan'jê-an), a. Relating to a phalanx; phalangeal.

Phalanger (fa-lan'jêr), n. [Fr. phalanger and phalangiste.] The name given to the animals of the genus Phalanger, a genus of marsupial quadrupeds inhabiting Australasia: also called phalangists. The hinder feet have a large opposable thumb, which is nailless, with four toes armed with claws, and the two innermost of the toes are joined together almost to the end. The phalangers are nocturnal in their habits, and live in trees, feeding on insects, fruits, leaves, &c. The sooty phalanger or tapoa (P. fuliginosa), so called from its colour, is pretty common in Tasmania, where it is pursued for its fine soft fur. The vulpine phalanger or vulpine opossum (P. vulpina) is another species common in Australia.—Flying phalanger. See FLYING-PHALANGER.

Vulpine Phalanger (Phalangerista vulpina).

Phalangial, Phalangian (fa-lan'ji-al, fal-lan'ji-an), a. Same as Phalangeal.

Phalangidæ (fa-lan'ji-dê), n. pl. [From the genus Phalangium, from Gr. phalangion, a venomous spider, from phalanx, a name given from the long joints of its legs.] A family of Arachnide, called Harvestmen or Shepherd-spiders.

Phalangious (fa-lan'ji-us), a. [Gr. phalangion, a kind of spider, from phalanx.] See PHALANGIDÆ.] Pertaining to spiders of the genus Phalangium.

Phalangite (fâ-lan'jit), n. [Gr. phalangites.] A soldier belonging to a phalanx.

Phalangium (fa-lan'ji-um), n. A genus of arachnids (spiders) belonging to the Phalangidæ. They are characterized by the great length of the legs, and by the filiform maxillary palpi, terminated by simple hooks. The abdomen and cephalothorax are of about equal width, but clearly marked off from one another, and the former is segmented. They are active in their habits, and live upon animal food. H. A. Nicholson.

Phalansterian (fal-an'stê-ri-an), n. A believer in phalansterianism; a disciple of Fourier, the French socialist.

Phalansterian (fal-an'stê-ri-an), a. Relating to phalansterianism or Fourierism.

Phalansterian doctrines. Sat. Rev.

Phalansterianism, Phalansterism (fal-an'stê-ri-an-izm, fal-an'stê-rizm), n. Fourierism, the system of Charles Fourier, the French socialist, who advocated the reorganization of society into so many phalansteries, containing each about 1800 persons. See FOURIERISM.

Phalanstery (fal'an-stê-ri), n. [Fr. phalanstère, from Gr. phalanx, a phalanx.] 1. A community of phalansterians living together according to the system proposed by Fourier. See FOURIERISM.—2. The edifice occupied as a dwelling by a Fourierite community.

Phalanges (fal'angks or fâ'langks), n. pl. Phalanges (fa-lan'gez), but except in anatomy use has sanctioned also Phalanxes (fal'angks-êz, fâ'langks-êz). [Gr. phalanx, a line or order of battle, battle array.] 1. In Greek antiqu. a name given generally to the whole of the heavy-armed infantry of an army, but particularly to each of the grand divisions of that class of troops when formed in ranks and files close and deep, with their shields joined and pikes crossing each other so as to present a very firm front to a foe.

Among them move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood
Of flutes and soft recorders. Milton.

2. Any body of troops or men formed in close array, or any combination of people distinguished for firmness and solidity of union. 3. In anat. one of the small bones forming the fingers or the toes.—4. A compact society or association of members organized upon the plan of Fourier, and having a common dwelling.—5. In zoological classification sometimes used for a division included by the family, and including the genus.

Phalaris (fâ-la-ris), n. [Gr. phalaris, a kind of grass, from phalaros, brilliant, having shining seeds.] A small genus of grasses, having flowers in close spikes, of which the seed of one of the species, P. canariensis, or canary-grass, is extensively employed as food for birds, and commonly known as canary-seed. The species are found chiefly in warm parts of the world, but P. canariensis, a native of the Canary Islands, is naturalized in Europe, and is cultivated in the Isle of Thanet and some other parts of Kent. P. arundinacea, or reed canary-grass, is a British plant, growing on the sides of lakes and rivers. A variety with variegated leaves is frequent in gardens, and is called riband grass, or gardener's garters.

Phalarope (fâ-la-rôp), n. [Fr., from Gr. phalaros, white, and pous, pados, a foot.] The common name of several grallatorial birds forming the genus Phalaropus. The gray phalarope (P. lobatus), formerly very rare in Britain, is now pretty frequently seen in the course of its migration from its arctic breeding place to its southern winter quarters. It is a beautiful bird, rather over 8 inches long, with a short tail, slender straight bill like that of the sandpiper, and remarkable for the great difference between its summer and winter plumage. The red-necked phalarope (P. hyperboreus) breeds in some of the most northern Scottish islands. It is rather smaller than the gray phalarope.

Phalaropus (fâ-la-rô-pus), n. A genus of grallatorial birds, family Scolopacidae (snipes), characterized by toes with scalloped or lobated membranes. See PHALAROPE.

Phallic (fâ'lik), a. Pertaining to the phallus; pertaining to the worship of the generative principle in nature; pertaining to the indecent rites connected with the orgies of Bacchus.

Phallus (fâ'lus), n. [Gr. phallos, the virile organ.] 1. The emblem of the generative power in nature, carried in solemn procession in the Bacchic orgies of ancient Greece, and also an object of veneration or worship among various Oriental nations.—2. In bot. a genus of fungi of the division Gasteromycetes. The most common British species is P. impudicus or fœtidus, popularly called stinkhorn, which has a foetid and disgusting smell.

Phanet (fân), n. A vane. Joye.

Phanerogam (fan'êr-o-gam), n. In bot. a phanerogamic plant.

Well-developed cryptogams, in common with all phanerogams, exhibit this genesis of mechanical motion still more conspicuously in the circulation of sap. H. Spencer.

Phanerogamia (fan'êr-o-gâ'mi-a), n. pl. [Gr. phaneros, manifest, and gamos, marriage.] A primary division of the vegetable kingdom, comprising those plants which have their organs of reproduction developed and distinctly apparent, that is, plants having conspicuous flowers containing stamens and pistils; flowering plants. See CRYPTOGAMIA.

Phanerogamian (fan'êr-o-gâ'mi-an), a. Same as Phanerogamic.

Phanerogamic, Phanerogamous (fan'êr-o-gam'ik, fan'êr-o-gâ-mus), n. In bot. pertaining to plants of the division Phanerogamia; belonging to flowering plants. Used in contradistinction to cryptogamic, cryptogamous.

Phansigar (fan'î-gâr), n. A hereditary strangler; a Thug.

Phantasma (fan'ta-skôp), n. [Gr. phantasma, an image, and skôpeô, I view.] An apparatus for enabling persons to converge the optical axes of the eyes, or to look cross-eyed, and thereby observe certain phenomena of binocular vision. Brande & Cox.

Phantasm (fan'tazm), n. [Gr. phantasma, from phantazô, to show, from the stem of phainô, to show, phainomai, to appear.] 1. A creation of the fancy; an imaginary existence which seems to be real; an apparition; an optical illusion; a dream; a phantasm.

Assaying by his devilish art to reach
The organs of her fancy, and with them forge
Illusions as he list, phantasms, and dreams.
Milton.

2. An idea; a notion; a fancy.

Phantasma (fan-tas'ma), n. A phantasm; a vision; a daydream. Shak.

Phantasmagoria (fan-tas'ma-gō'ri-a), n. [Gr. phantasma, a phantasm, and agora, an assembly.] 1. Any exhibition of images by means of shadows, as by the magic lantern; especially such as is produced by a combination of two lanterns by which a gradual change from one set of shadows to another set is effected; hence, any mixed gathering of figures; illusive images.

There is not wanting a feast of broad, joyous humour, in this stranger phantasmagoria, where pit and stage, and man and animal, and earth and air, are jumbled in confusion worse confounded, and the copious, kind, ruddy light of true mirth overshines and warms the whole. Carlyle.

2. The apparatus by means of which such an exhibition is produced; a magic lantern.

Phantasmagoric (fan-tas'ma-gō'ri-al), a. Relating to phantasmagoria; phantasmagoric.

Phantasmagoric (fan-tas'ma-gō'rik), a. Same as Phantasmagoric.

Phantasmagory (fan-tas'ma-gō-ri), n. Same as Phantasmagoria. Quart. Rev.

Phantasmal (fan-taz'mal), a. Pertaining to or resembling a phantasm; spectral; illusive. 'A wide circle of a transitory, phantasmal character.' Coleridge.

Phantasmalian (fan-taz'mā-li-an), a. Relating to phantasms; of the nature of phantasms; phantasmal. 'A horrid phantasmalian monomania.' Lord Lytton.

Phantasmoscope (fan-tas'ma-skōp), n. Same as Phantasmoscope.

Phantasmatography (fan-tas'ma-tog'ra-fi), n. [From Gr. phantasma, an image, and graphō, to describe.] A description of celestial appearances, as the rainbow, &c. [Rare.]

Phantastic, Phantastical (fan-tas'tik, fan-tas'tik-al), See FANTASTIC.

Phantasty (fan-tas'tri), n. Phantasy. Cutworth.

Phantasy (fan'ta-si), n. Same as Fantasy. Phantasy (fan'ta-si), v.t. To imagine fancifully; to fancy. Hall.

Phantom (fan'tom), n. [Fr. fantôme, from L. phantasma. See PHANTASM.] 1. That which has only an apparent existence; an apparition; a spectre; a fancied vision; a phantasm. 'Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise.' Dee. 'A mere tissue of airy phantoms.' Pop. Caird. 'The phantom of a silent song.' Tennyson.

A fourth (passage in the poems of Milton) brings before us the splendid phantoms of chivalrous romance, the trophied lists, the embroidered housings, the haunted forests, the enchanted gardens, &c. &c. Macaulay.

2. See MANIKIN, 2.

Pharisee (fār-i-sē), n. [Gr. phariseos, from Heb. pārish, separated, from pārash, to cleave, divide, separate.] 1. One of a sect among the Jews, distinguished by their strict observance of rites and ceremonies and of the traditions of the elders, and whose pretended holiness led them to separate themselves as a sect, considering themselves as more righteous than other Jews. Hence—2. A strict observer of the outward forms in religion, without the spirit of it; a hypocrite; in a general way, one addicted to the observance of mere rule and form. 'The ceremonial cleanness which characterizes the dictum of our academical Pharisees.' Macaulay.

Phariseism (fār-i-sē-izm), n. Same as Pharisaism.

Pharmaceutic, Pharmaceutical (fār-ma-sū'tik, fār-ma-sū'tik-al), a. [Gr. pharmakeutikos, from pharmakeuō, to administer or use medicine, from pharmakon, poison or medicine.] Pertaining to the knowledge or art of pharmacy, or to the art of preparing medicines.—Pharmaceutical chemist. See under CHEMIST.—Pharmaceutical chemistry, the application of the laws of chemistry to those substances which are employed for the cure of diseases.

Pharmaceutically (fār-ma-sū'tik-al-li), adv. In the manner of pharmacy.

Pharmaceutics (fār-ma-sū'tiks), n. The science of preparing medicines; pharmacy.

Pharmaceutist (fār-ma-sū'tist), n. One who prepares medicines; one who practises pharmacy; an apothecary.

Pharmacist (fār-ma-sist), n. One skilled in pharmacy; a druggist.

Pharmaco-dynamics (fār'ma-kō-di-nam'iks), n. [Gr. pharmakon, medicine, and dynamis, power.] That branch of pharmacology which treats of the power or effects of medicine.

Pharmacognosia (fār'ma-kog-nō'si-a), n. [Gr. pharmakon, medicine, and gignōskō, to know.] That branch of pharmacology which treats of the natural and chemical history of unprepared medicines, or simples. It is also termed Pharmacography and Pharmacomathy.

Pharmacography (fār-ma-kog'ra-fi), n. Same as Pharmacognosia.

Pharmacolite (fār-mak'ō-lit), n. [Gr. pharmakon, medicine, and lithos, a stone.] A native arseniate of lime, snow-white or milk-white, inclining to reddish or yellowish white. It occurs in small reniform, botryoidal, and globular masses, in association with arsenical ores of cobalt and silver, and has a silky lustre.

Pharmacologia (fār'ma-kō-lō'jī-a), n. Same as Pharmacology.

Pharmacologist (fār-ma-kō-lō-jist), n. One who is skilled in pharmacology; one who writes on drugs, or the composition and preparation of medicines.

Pharmacology (fār-ma-kō-lō-jī), n. [Gr. pharmakon, a drug, and logos, discourse.] 1. The science or knowledge of drugs, or the art of preparing medicines: a branch of materia medica.—2. A treatise on the art of preparing medicines.

Pharmacon (fār'ma-kon), n. [Gr. pharmakon.] A medicine or drug; a poison. Dunglison.

Pharmacopœia (fār'ma-kō-pē'a), n. [Gr. pharmakon, medicine, and poieō, to make.] 1. A dispensatory, or book of directions for the preparation, &c., of medicines, generally published by authority.—2. A chemical laboratory.

Pharmacopolist (fār-ma-kō-pō-list), n. [Gr. pharmakon, medicine, and poieō, to sell.] One who sells medicines; an apothecary.

Pharmacosiderite (fār'ma-kō-sid'er-it), n. [Gr. pharmakon, a drug, and sideros, iron.] Same as Cube-ore.

Pharmacy (fār'ma-si), n. [Fr. pharmacie = Gr. pharmakeia, from pharmakon, a drug.] The art or practice of preparing, preserving, and compounding medicines, and of dispensing them according to the formulae or prescriptions of medical practitioners; the occupation of an apothecary or pharmaceutical chemist.

Pharo (fā'rō), n. See FARO.

Pharo† (fā'rō), n. Same as Pharos. Sir T. Herbert.

Pharology (fa-rōl'ō-jī), n. [Pharos, and Gr. logos, discourse.] The art or science of exhibiting light-signals to ships for their guidance.

Pharos (fā'ros), n. [Gr. pharos, from the name of a small island near Alexandria, in Egypt, on which Ptolemy Philadelphus built a famous lighthouse.] 1. A lighthouse or tower which anciently stood on the isle of Pharos, at the entrance to the port of Alexandria. Hence—2. Any lighthouse for the direction of seamen; a watch-tower; a beacon. 'The roar that breaks the Pharos from the base.' Tennyson.

Pharyngeal (fa-rin'jē-al), a. Belonging to or affecting the pharynx; as, a pharyngeal nerve.

Pharyngeal (fa-rin'jē-al), n. In anat. a name given to any of the muscles, vessels, or nerves of the pharynx.

Pharyngitis (fa-rin'jītis), n. In med. an inflammation of the membrane which forms the pharynx.

Pharyngobranchii (fa-ring'gō-brang'ki-i), n. pl. [Gr. pharynx, pharynx, the pharynx, and branchia, gills.] An order of fishes comprising only the lancelet. See BRANCHIOSTOMA.

Pharyngognathi (fa-ring'gō-gnā'thi), n. pl. [Gr. pharynx, pharynx, the pharynx, and gnathos, the jaw.] An order of teleostean fishes, in which the inferior pharyngeal bones are anchylosed so as to form a single bone, which is usually armed with teeth. The order includes the acanthopterygian genera the wrasses (Labrax, &c.), the parrot-fishes (Scarus), Chromis; and the malacopterygian garfish, saury pikes, and flying-fish.

Pharyngography (fa-rin-gog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. pharynx, the gullet or windpipe, and graphō, I write.] An anatomical description of the pharynx. Dunglison.

Pharyngology (fa-rin-gol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. pharynx, the gullet, and logos, a discourse.] The part of anatomy that treats of the pharynx. Dunglison.

Pharyngotomy (fa-rin-gol'ō-tō-mi), n. [See PHARYNGOTOMY.] A surgical instrument used to scarify inflamed tonsils, and to open abscesses which form in the parietes of the pharynx.

Pharyngotomy (fa-rin-gol'ō-mi), n. [Gr. pharynx, the pharynx, and temnō, to cut.] In surg. the operation of making an incision into the pharynx to remove a tumour or anything that obstructs the passage.

Pharynx (fār'ingks), n. [Gr.] The muscular sac which intervenes between the cavity of the mouth and the narrow œsophagus. The posterior nostrils open into it above the soft palate, while the larynx, with its lid, the epiglottis, is in front and below. Its contraction transmits the food from the mouth to the œsophagus.

Phascolarctos (fas-kō-lark'tos), n. [Gr.

Phascolarctos cinereus.

phaskōlos, leathern bag, purse, and arktos, bear.] An Australian marsupial animal,

Fâte, fâr, fat, fall; mē, met, hér; pine, pin; nôte, not, môve; tûbe, tub, byll; oil, pound; ū, Sc. abune; ŷ, Sc. fey.

closely allied to the phalangers. It is called by the natives koala (which see).

Phascolumys (fas-kol'o-mis), n. [Gr. phaskolos, apouch, and mys, a mouse, i.] A genus of marsupiate mammals constituting the family Phascolumyidae, of which there is only one known genus, the P. Wombat. See WOMBAT.

Phascolotherium (fas-kol'o-thē'ri-um), n. [Gr. phaskolos, a pouch, and therion, a wild beast, i.] A genus of marsupials, remains of which have been found in the inferior oolite at Stonesfield; the jaws only have been found. It is the Didelphis Bucklandi of Cuvier. It has been placed by different naturalists with the kangaroos (Macropus), the Tasmanian wolf (Thylacinus), and the opossums (Didelphis).

Phase (fāz), n. [Fr. phase; Gr. phasis, from phainomai, to appear.] 1. In astron. one of the recurring appearances or states of the moon or a planet in respect to quantity of illumination, or figure of enlightened disc.—2. In physics, the particular state, at a given instant, of a continuously varying and periodic phenomenon; as, the phases of an eclipse, of a tide, of a pendulum, with reference to the entire range of its vibration, &c.—3. An aspect or appearance of that which presents various aspects; one of the various aspects in which a question presents itself to the mind, or in which it may be regarded; a turn or chance; as, the varying phases of life; the war entered on a new phase.

Fill out of painful phases wrought
There flutters up a happy thought. Tennyson.

4. In mineral. transparent green quartz.

Phasel (fāz'el), n. [Gr. phasēlos, a sort of kidney-bean.] The French bean or kidney-bean.

Phaseolite (fa-zē'o-lit), n. [L. phaseolus, Gr. phasēlos, a kidney-bean, and lithos, a stone.] A fossil leguminous plant. Page.

Phaseolus (fa-zē'o-lus), n. [See above.] A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Leguminosae. There are about sixty species of climbing or prostrate herbs, with trifoliate leaves, and axillary fascicles of white, yellow, red, or violet, often large flowers. The species are indigenous in the tropical parts both of the Old and New World, but two species are well known in this country, P. vulgaris (the common kidney-bean) and P. multiflorus (the scarlet-runner); their unripe pods being much esteemed as legumes, and also for pickling. The ripe seeds are, however, employed on the Continent, and form the haricots of the French. Several species are cultivated in India, as the ripe seeds form pulses which are much used by the natives as a portion of their diet.

Phasianella (fā'zi-a-nel'la), n. [See PHEASANT.] The pheasant-shell, a genus of turbinated, gasteropodous mollusca, found in South America, India, Australia, the Mediterranean, &c. The shell is spiral and obovate, the outside polished and richly coloured, and the operculum shelly. This genus belongs to the family Trochidae.

Phasianidae (fā'zi-an'i-dē), n. pl. [From L. phasianus, a pheasant, from Gr. phasianos. See PHEASANT.] A family of rasorial or gallinaceous birds, of which the genus Phasianus, which includes the pheasants proper, is the type. (See PHEASANT.) The family also includes the common or domestic fowl (genus Gallus), the turkey (Meleagris), the guinea-fowl (Numida), and the peacock (Pavo). None of the members are natives of Britain.

Phasis (fā'sis), n. pl. Phases (fā'sēz). In astron. a phase.

Phasm, Phasma (fazm, faz'ma), n. [Gr., from phainō, to show.] Appearance; fancied apparition; phantom. [Rare.]

Such phasms, such apparitions, are most of those excellencies which men applaud in themselves.

Dr. H. More.

Phasmidae (fas'mi-dē), n. pl. [Gr. phasma, a spectre, from phainō, to show, i.] Spectre insects or walking-sticks, a family of orthopterous insects allied to the Mantidae, restricted to warm countries, and remarkable for their very close resemblance to the objects in the midst of which they live, this peculiarity, known as mimicry, being their only protection against their enemies. The family includes the genera Phasma, Phyllium, Cladomorphus, &c. Some of them are destitute of wings and have the appearance of dead twigs, while the absence of motion in the insect adds to the deception. In others, as the genus Phyllium, the wings have the appearance of withered leaves, while the brighter hue of the wing-covers of a few of larger size give to the animal the appearance of a fresher leaf.

Phasmidae, or Spectre Insects.

1, Cladomorphus phyllinus (Brazilian Walking-stick). 2, Acrophylla chronus, Australia.

Phassachate (fas'sa-kāt), n. [Gr. phassa, the wood-pigeon, and achate, agate.] The lead-coloured agate.

Phatagin (fat'a-jin), n. The Manis tetractyla, or four-toed manis. See MANIS.

Pheasant (fēz'ant), n. [L. phasianus, from Gr. phasianos, from Phasis, a river of Asia, near the mouth of which these birds are said to have been numerous.] The common name given to several beautiful birds of the genus Phasianus, family Phasianidae, Golden Pheasant (Phasianus pictus).

and order Rasores or Gallinae. The true pheasant, P. colchicus, is distinguished by having a long tail, the feathers of which are of different lengths, and overlay each other; the cheeks are partly destitute of feathers, and covered with a red skin. Pheasants are much admired for the beauty of their form, and the splendour of the hues of their plumage. The golden pheasant (P. pictus) is a native of China; the prevailing colours of its plumage are red, yellow, and blue, and it is distinguished by a crest upon the head. The silver pheasant (P. or Gallophasis nycthemerus) is also a native of China, and receives its name from its upper surface and tail being silver white with black markings.

Silver Pheasant (Phasianus nycthemerus).

Pheasant-cuckoo (fēz'ant-ku'kō), n. The name commonly given to the birds of the genus Centropus. See CENTROPUS.

Pheasantry (fēz'ant-ri), n. A place for breeding, rearing, and keeping pheasants.

Pheasant's-eye (fēz'ants-i), n. A plant of the genus Adonis, the A. autumnalis, with small scarlet flowers and much-divided pale-green leaves. See ADONIS.

Pheasant-shell (fēz'ant-shel). See PHASIANELLA.

Pheer (fēr), n. A companion. See FERE.

Peese (fēz), n. A fit of fretfulness; peevishness. [Colloq.]

Peeshy (fē'zi), a. Fretful; querulous; irritable. Forby. [Colloq.]

Peetze (fēz), n. Same as Peaze.

Phelloplastics (fel-lō-plas'tiks), n. [Gr. phellos, cork, and plassō, to form, fashion, or make, i.] The art of modelling in cork.

Phenakism (fē'n-kizm), n. [Gr. phenakismos, deceit.] The act of conveying false ideas or impressions; deceit. Bacon.

Phenakistoscope (fē'n-kis'to-skōp), n. [Gr. phenakistilos, deceitful, and skopeō, I view, i.] An instrument which produces the representation of actual motion, as in leaping, walking, flying, &c., used for illustrating the persistence of impressions on the retina.

Phengite (fēn'jit), n. [Gr. phengites, from phengō, to shine, i.] Same as Muscovite.

Phenic (fē'nik), a. Applied to an acid obtained from coal-tar; carboic acid (which see).

Phenician (fē-nish'i-an), n. and a. See PHœNICIAN.

Phenicin, Phenicine (fē'n-i-sin), n. [Gr. phoinix, purple, i.] A colouring matter of a brown colour produced by the action of nitro-sulphuric acid on carboic acid (phenol).

Phenicious (fē-nish'us), a. Pertaining to phenicin; of the colour of phenicin.

Phenicopter (fē-ni-kop'tēr), n. A flamingo. Huckwell.

Phenix (fē'niks), n. See PHœNIX.

Phenogam (fē-nō-gam), n. See PHANEROGAM.

Phenogamia (fē-nō-ga'mi-a), n. pl. See PHANEROGAMIA.

Phenogamous (fē-nō-g'a-mus), a. Same as Phanerogamous.

Phenol (fē'nol), n. (C₆H₅O.) Another name for Carboic Acid. Under some circumstances it gives rise to a blue colouring matter, which is used to a certain extent in dyeing.

Phenomenal (fē-nōm'e-nal), a. Connected with, relating to, or constituted by phenomena; of the nature of a phenomenon or marvel; wonderful; extraordinary.

Phenomenalism (fē-nōm'e-nal-izm), n. That system of philosophy which inquires only into the causes of existing phenomena.

(Berkeley) inaugurated a new and second era in the intellectual revolution which Des Cartes set agoing. This second period in modern philosophy has been marked by the sceptical phenomenalism of Hume (now represented by Positivism); the Scotch psychology of common sense; and the German critical and dialectical philosophy of reason. Prof. Fraser.

Phenomenally (fē-nōm'e-nal-i), adv. In the manner of a phenomenon. Coleridge.

Phenomenism (fē-nōm'en-izm), n. The doctrine or principles of the phenomenists.

Phenomenist (fē-nōm'en-ist), n. One who believes only in what he observes or in phenomena, having no regard to their causes or consequences; one who does not believe in a priori reasoning or necessary primary principles; one who does not believe in an invariable connection between cause and effect, but holds this generally acknowledged relation to be nothing more than a habitually observed sequence.

Phenomenology (fē-nōm'e-nol'o-jī), n. [Phenomenon, and Gr. logos, a discourse.] A description or history of phenomena.

Phenomenon (fē-nōm'e-non), n. pl. Phenomena (fē-nōm'e-na). [Gr. phainomēnon, what appears, from phainomai, to appear, i.]

1. A visible manifestation or appearance, or one which in any way directly falls under our notice; a fact or occurrence presented to our observation either in the external world or in the human mind; an appearance produced by the action of the different forces upon matter; as, natural phenomena; mental phenomena; the phenomena of light, heat, or electricity. 'The very lowest and commonest phenomena of nature.' South.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is gravitation. Bentley.

Among the various phenomena which the human mind presents to our view, there is none more calculated to excite our curiosity and our wonder than the communication which is carried on between the sentient, thinking, and active principle within us, and the material objects with which we are surrounded. D. Stewart.

ch, chain; ch, Sc. loch; g, go; j, job;

û, Fr. ton; ng, sing; TH, then; th, thin;

w, wig; wh, whig; zh, azure.—See KEY.

2. What strikes us as strange and uncommon; something extraordinary; a very remarkable personage.

Phenyl, Phenyle (fē'nīl), n. (C_6H_5 ; in the free state, $C_{12}H_{10}$) An organic radical found in phenol, or carbolic acid, benzole, and aniline. It crystallizes from alcohol in organic nacreous scales, which melt at 69° and sublime at a higher temperature.

Phenylamine (fē-nī'l-a-mīn), n. Same as Aniline.

Phenylia (fē-nī'l-i-a), n. Same as Aniline.

Phenyllic (fē-nī'l'ik), a. Same as Phenic.

Phoen (fē'on), n. 1. In her, the barbed iron head of a dart, arrow, or other weapon.—2. A barbed javelin formerly carried by the serjeant-at-arms before royalty. It is still used as a royal mark, and called 'the broad arrow.'

Phoen.

Phial (fī'al), n. [L. phiala, from Gr. phiale, a phial.] 1. A glass vessel or bottle; especially, a small glass bottle used for holding liquors, and particularly liquid medicines. It is often written and pronounced Vial. 'Juice of cursed hebenon in a phial.' Shak. Leyden-phial, a vessel used in electrical experiments. See LEYDEN-PHIAL.

Phial (fī'al), v.t. pret. & pp. phialled; ppr. phialling. To put or keep in a phial.

Full on my fencible head its phial'd wrath
May fate exhaust. Shenstone.

Phigalian (fī-gā'l-i-an), a. Pertaining to Phigalia, an ancient town in the Morea or Peloponnesus.—Phigalian marbles, the name given to a series of twenty-three sculptured marbles in alto-relievo now deposited in the British Museum, where they form part of the collection known by the name of the Elgin marbles. They represent the combat of the Centaurs and Lapithæ, and that of the Greeks and Amazons.

Philabeg (fī'l-a-beg), n. See FILLIBEG.

Philadelphaceæ (fī'l'a-del-fā'sē-ē), n. pl. A small tribe of plants now united with Saxifragaceæ, of which Philadelphus is the principal genus. The species are deciduous shrubs, inhabiting thickets in Europe, North America, the north of India, and Japan; they have opposite leaves, distinct styles, and capsular fruit, containing a large number of minute seeds. Many of them are clothed with beautiful stellate hairs, and have fragrant flowers. P. coronarius is frequently met with in shrubberies under the name of syringa or mock-orange; it has large, very fragrant, white flowers.

Philadelphian (fī'l-a-del-fī'an), a. [From Gr. philos, loved, loving, and adelphos, brother.] Pertaining to Philadelphia, or to Ptolemy Philadelphus.

Philadelphian (fī'l-a-del-fī'an), n. 1. A native or inhabitant of Philadelphia.—2. One of a sect of the seventeenth century founded by Jane Leadby, and called also the Family of Love.

Philadelphus (fī'l-a-del-fus), n. [Gr. philadelphos, a sweet-flowering shrub, jasmine.] A genus of plants belonging to the tribe Philadelphaceæ. The species consist of shrubs with white pedicellate flowers arranged in a corymbose cyme, in a panicle-like manner. The greater number are indigenous in North America, whence they have been introduced into the shrubberies of this country. The best known species is the P. coronarius, commonly called mock-orange and syringa. See MOCK-ORANGE.

Philander (fī-lan'dér), v.i. [From Philander, a virtuous youth in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, between whom and a married lady named Gambrina there were certain tender passages.] To make love sentimentally to a lady; to flirt; to pretend adoration. 'Emissaries of a philandering Faustus.' Thackeray.

Philanthropic, Philanthropical (fī-an-throp'ik, fī-lan-throp'ik-al), a. [Gr. philanthropikos, See PHILANTHROPY.] Pertaining to, proceeding from, or characterized by philanthropy; possessing general benevolence; entertaining good-will toward all men; loving mankind; as, a philanthropic spirit; philanthropic efforts.

Philanthropically (fī-lan-throp'ik-al-lī), adv. In a philanthropic manner; with philanthropy; benevolently.

Philanthropism (fī-lan-throp-in-izm), n. [From philanthropy.] A system of education on so-called natural principles, which was promoted by Basedow and his friends in Germany in the last century, and mainly founded on the notions of Locke and Rousseau.

Philanthropist (fī-lan-throp-in-ist), n. An advocate for philanthropism.

Philanthropist (fī-lan-throp-ist), n. One who evinces philanthropy; a person of general benevolence; one who loves or wishes well to his fellow-men, and who exerts himself in doing them good. 'Thou great philanthropist, Father of angels, but the friend of man.' Young.

Philanthropic (fī-lan-throp-ist'ik), a. Relating to, produced by, or characterizing a philanthropist. [Rare.]

Philanthropy (fī-lan-thrō-pī), n. [Gr. philanthropia, from philos, loving, a friend, and anthropos, man.] Love towards mankind; benevolence toward the whole human family; universal good-will.

Such a transient temporary good nature is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue. Addison.

Philatory (fī'l'a-to-ri), n. [Probably a corruption of phyllatory.] In R. Cath. Ch. a transparent reliquary placed horizontally, with an ornamented top. Pugin.

Philautie (fī-l'a-tī), n. [Gr. philautia—philos, loving, and autos, self.] Love of self; selfishness.

Here we see philautie, or self-love, which rageth in men so preposterously, that even natural duties and affection [are] quite forgotten. Holinshead.

Philharmonic (fī-l'hār-mon'ik), a. [Gr. philos, loving, and harmonia, harmony.] Loving harmony; fond of harmony.

Philhellene (fī-l'hel-lēn), n. A philhellénist (which see). Emerson.

Philhellenic (fī-l'hel-len'ik), a. Pertaining to philhellenists; loving the Greeks.

Philhellenism (fī-l'hel-len-izm), n. Love of Greece; the principles of the philhellenists.

Philhellenist (fī-l'hel-len-ist), n. [Fr. philhellène, from Gr. philos, loving, and Hellen, a Greek.] A friend of Greece; one who supports the cause and interests of the Greeks (Hellenes); particularly, one who supported them in their successful struggle with the Turks for independence.

Philibeg (fī'l-i-beg), n. A kilt; a fillibeg (which see).

Philippian (fī-lip-pi-an), n. A native or inhabitant of Philippi, a city of ancient Macedonia named from King Philip; as, 'the Epistle of Paul to the Philippians.'

Philippian (fī-lip-pi-an), a. Of or pertaining to Philippi or its inhabitants.

Philippic (fī-lip-pik), n. 1. One of a series of orations delivered by Demosthenes, the Grecian orator, against Philip, king of Macedonia, the father of Alexander the Great, in which the orator inveighs against the indolence of the Athenians, their jealousy of their allies, &c. Hence—2. Any discourse or declamation full of acrimonious invective. The fourteen orations of Cicero against Mark Antony are called Philippics.

Philippize (fī-lip-iz), v.i. pret. & pp. philippized; ppr. philippizing. 1. To write or utter a philippic or invective; to declaim against some person or thing.

If the oracle at Hattin philippized, the oracle of Göttingen philippized no less. De Quincey.

2. To side with Philip of Macedon; to support or advocate the cause of Philip. [A Greek idiom.]

Philister (fī-lis'tér), n. A cant name given to townsmen by the students in German universities; hence, a commonplace person of limited culture and ideas; a philistine. See PHILISTINE.

He (Nicolaï) was animated with a fierce zeal against Jesuits; in this most people thought him partly right; but when he wrote against Kant's philosophy, without comprehending it, and judged of poetry as he judged of Brunswick muck, by its utility, many people thought him wrong. A man of such spiritual habits is now by the Germans called a Philister. Philistine; Nicolaï earned for himself the painful preëminence of being Erst-Philister, Arch-philistine. Carlyle.

Philistine (fī-lis'tin or fī-lis-tin), n. 1. An inhabitant of Philistia, now a portion of Syria.—2. The English form of Philister, a term applied by German students to any one who has not been trained in a university. Hence, a matter-of-fact, commonplace person, especially of the middle class, deficient in liberal culture and large intelligence, and so wanting in sentiment and taste, entirely imbued with utilitarianism; a person of narrow views; a man of 'parochial' intellect; a prosaic, practical man.

Spending its exertions within a bounded field, the field of plain sense, of direct practical utility, how it (Philistinism) has augmented the comforts and conveniences of life for us! Doors that open, windows that shut, locks that turn, razors that shave, coats that wear, watches that go, and a thousand more such good things, are the inventions of the Philistines. Matt. Arnold.

Last came the interpreter, in whose slowly relaxing grasp we still lie—the heavy-handed Protestant Philistine—sincere, gross of perception, prosaic, he saw in Paul's mystical idea of man's investiture with the righteousness of God nothing but a strict legal transaction, and reserved all his imagination for Hell and the New Jerusalem and his foretaste of them. Matt. Arnold.

Philistinism (fī-lis-tin-izm), n. Manners or modes of thinking of Philistines.

Out of the steady humdrum habit of the creeping Saxon, as the Celt calls him,—out of his way of going near the ground,—has come, no doubt, Philistinism, that plant of essentially Germanic growth, flourishing with its genuine marks only in the German fatherland, Great Britain and her colonies, and the United States of America. Matt. Arnold.

Phil-horse (fī'l'hors), n. A horse in the shafts; a corruption of thill-horse. Shak.

Philippena (fī-lī-pē'na), n. See FILLIPPE.

Philippia (fī'līps-i-a), n. [After Professor Philipp, the discoverer.] A genus of trilobites found in the mountain limestone of England and Ireland.

Philipsite (fī'līps-it), n. In mineral. (a) A sulphuret of copper and iron. (b) A hydrous silicate of alumina, lime, and potassium, with a crystalline figure, like that of harmotome or cross-stone.

Phillyrea (fī-lī-rē-a), n. [Gr. phillyrea.] A genus of Mediterranean evergreen shrubs, some of which are cultivated in our gardens, and known by the name of mock privet. They are smooth shrubs, with evergreen leaves, and small diandrous flowers in axillary fascicles.

Philocalist (fī-lōk'al-ist), n. [Gr. philos, loving, and kalos, beautiful.] A lover of the beautiful. [Rare.]

Philogyny (fī-lōj'ni), n. [Gr. philos, loving, fondness, and gynē, a woman.] Fondness for women; uxoriousness. 'Because the Turks so much admire philogyny.' Byron.

Philohellenian (fī-lō-hel-lē'nī-an), n. Same as Philhellenist. Dr. Arnold.

Philologer (fī-lōl'o-jér), n. Same as Philologist.

No philologist could examine the Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin without believing them to have sprung from the same source, which perhaps no longer exists. Sir W. Jones.

Philologian (fī-lō-lō'jī-an), n. Same as Philologist. Pop. Ency.

Philological, Philologic (fī-lō-lō'jīk-al, fī-lō-lō'jīk), a. Pertaining to philology, or to the study and knowledge of language.

Philologically (fī-lō-lō'jīk-al-lī), adv. In a philological manner.

Philologist (fī-lō-lō-jist), n. One versed in philology, or the study of language in a philosophic manner.

Philologize (fī-lō-lō-jiz), v.i. To offer criticisms. Brylenn. [Rare.]

Philologue (fī-lō-lōg), n. Same as Philologist. Latham.

Philology (fī-lō-lō-jī), n. [Gr. philologia, from philos, to love, and logos, a word.] 1. In the ancient Greek sense, the love of learning and literature; also, the study of language and literature.—2. Criticism; grammatical learning. This is Johnson's definition, but the word is seldom used in this sense now. It is more properly defined as the study of languages in connection with, and as a means to the whole moral and intellectual action of different peoples. It is sometimes made to include rhetoric, poetry, history, and antiquities; sometimes it is regarded as more especially embracing the study of the classical languages, literature, and history. See extract below.—3. The science of language; linguistic science; linguistics. This is now a common signification of the term, but the qualified title of comparative philology is preferable to express this meaning. See extract.

Philology, whether classical or oriental, whether treating of ancient or modern, of cultivated or barbarous languages, is an historical science. Language is here treated simply as a means. The classical scholar uses Greek or Latin, the oriental scholar Hebrew or Sanskrit, or any other language, as a key to the understanding of the literary monuments which bygone ages have bequeathed to us as a spell to raise from the tomb of time the thoughts of great men in different countries, and as a means ultimately to trace the social, moral, intellectual, and religious progress of the human race. . . . In comparative philology the case is totally different. In the science of language languages are not treated as a means; language itself becomes the sole object of scientific inquiry. Dialects which have never produced any literature at all, the jargons of savage tribes, the clicks of the Hottentots, and the vocal modulations of the Indo-Chinese are as important, nay, for the solution of some of our problems, more important than the poetry of Homer or the prose of Cicero. We do not want to know languages, we want to know language; what language is, how it can form an instrument or an organ of thought; we want to know its origin, its nature, its laws, and it is only in order to arrive at that knowledge that we collect, arrange, and classify all the facts of language that are within our reach.

Max Müller.

Philomath (fil'ô-math), n. [Gr. philomathês—philos, a lover, and math, root of mathanô, to learn.] A lover of learning.

Ask my friend L'Abbé Salier to recommend to you some meagre philomath to teach you a little geometry and astronomy.

Cheslerfield.

Philomathematic (fil'ô-math'e-mat'ik), n. Same as Philomath.

Philomathic, Philomathical (fil'ô-math'ik, fil'ô-math'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to the love of learning.—2. Having a love of letters.

Philomathy (fil'ôm-a'thi), n. [Gr. philomathia. See above.] The love of learning. Maunder.

Philomel (fil'ô-mel), n. [From Philomela, daughter of Pandion, king of Athens, who was changed into a nightingale.] The nightingale.

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended The well-tuned warble of her nightly sorrow. Shak.

Philomela (fil'ô-mē'la), n. A genus of birds including the nightingale.

Philomen (fil'ô-mēn), n. Same as Philomela. Gascogne.

Philomoti (fil'ô-mot), a. [Corrupted from Fr. feuille morte, a dead leaf.] Of the colour of a dead leaf. Also written Filemot.

One of them was blue, another yellow, and another Philomot. Addison.

Philomusical (fil'ô-mū'zik-al), a. Loving music. Wright.

Philopena (fil'ô-pē'na), n. See FILIPPEEN.

Philopolemic (fil'ô-po-lem'ik), a. [Gr. philos, a lover, and polemikos, warlike.] Ruling over opposite or contending natures: an epithet of Minerva. Wright.

Philoprogenitiveness (fil'ô-prô-jen'it-iv-nēs), n. [Gr. philos, fond, and E. progeny.] In phren, the love of offspring; the instinctive love of young in general. Its organ is said to be situated above the middle part of the cerebellum.

Philosophaster (fil'ô-sô-fas-tēr), n. [A pejorative formed on type of poetaster.] A pretender to philosophy.

Of necessity there must be such a thing in the world as incorporeal substance; let considerable philosophasters hoot and deride as much as their follies please. Dr. H. More.

Philosophate (fil'ô-sô-fāt), v.t. [L. philosophor, philosophatus.] To play the philosopher; to moralize. 'Among such as philosophate.' Barrow.

Philosophation (fil'ô-sô-fā'shon), n. Philosophical speculation; discussion. Sir W. Pettie.

Philosophie (fil'ô-zof), n. [Fr.] A philosopher; a petty or puny philosopher. [Used in contempt.] Carlyle.

Philosophema, Philosopheme (fil'ô-sô-fē'ma, fil'ô-sô-fēm), n. [Gr. philosophēma, from philosophēō, to love knowledge, discuss, inquire, from philosophos, a philosopher.] A principle of reasoning; a theorem.

This, the most venerable, and perhaps the most ancient, of the Grecian myths, is a philosopheme. Coleridge.

Philosopher (fil'ô-sô-fēr), n. [Gr. philosophos. See PHILOSOPHY.] 1. A person versed in or devoted to philosophy, or in the principles of nature and morality; one who devotes himself to the study of moral or intellectual science. Formerly also it was applied to one versed in natural science or natural philosophy.—2. One who conforms his life to the principles of philosophy, especially to those of the stoical school; one who lives according to reason or the rules of practical wisdom.

Be mine a philosopher's life in the quiet woodland ways, Where, if I cannot be gay, let a passionless peace be my lot. Tennyson.

—Philosopher's egg, a medicine compounded of the yolk of an egg, saffron, &c., formerly supposed to be an excellent preservative against all poisons, plague, and other dangerous diseases. Nares.—Philosopher's stone, a stone or preparation which the alchemists formerly sought, as the instrument of converting the baser metals into pure gold. The alchemists held that the baser metals were all convertible into silver and gold by a long series of processes, and the instrument by which it was supposed that this mighty change was to be effected was a certain mineral to be produced by these processes, which being mixed with the base metal would transmute it.

Philosophess (fil'ô-sô-fēa), n. A female philosopher. Carlyle.

Philosophical, Philosophic (fil'ô-sô-fik-al, fil'ô-sô-fik), a. 1. Pertaining, suitable, or according to philosophy; characterized or constituted by philosophy; proceeding from philosophy; as, a philosophical argument; philosophical studies; a philosophical mind; a philosophical history.—2. Characteristic of a practical philosopher or wise man; calm; cool; temperate; frugal; abstemious. 'Philosophic fare.' Dryden. 'In years that bring the philosophic mind.' Wordsworth.—Philosophic wool, oxide of zinc formed during the combustion of the metal when it floats about in white flocks in the air. Brande & Co.

Philosophically (fil'ô-sô-fik-al-li), adv. In a philosophical manner: (a) according to the rules or principles of philosophy; as, to argue philosophically. (b) Calmly; wisely; with equanimity; stoically.

Philosophicalness (fil'ô-sô-fik-al-nēs), n. Quality of being philosophical. [Rare.]

Philosophism (fil'ô-sô-fizm), n. [Fr. philosophisme.] Spurious or would-be philosophy; the affectation of philosophy. Southey; Carlyle.

Philosophist (fil'ô-sô-fist), n. 1. A lover of sophistry; one who practises sophistry; a would-be philosopher. 'The philosophers and the philosophists.' Southey.—2. A philosopher.

Philosophistic, Philosophistical (fil'ô-sô-fistik, fil'ô-sô-fis'tik-al), a. Pertaining to the love or practice of sophistry or spurious philosophy. Wright.

Philosophize (fil'ô-sô-fiz), v.t. pret. philosophized; ppr. philosophizing. [From philosophy.] To reason like a philosopher; to search into the reason and nature of things; to investigate phenomena and assign rational causes for their existence; to form or attempt to form a philosophical system or theory.

Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing on the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.

Man philosophizes as he lives. He may philosophize well or ill, but philosophize he must. Sir W. Hamilton.

Philosophizer (fil'ô-sô-fiz-ēr), n. One who philosophizes.

Philosophizing (fil'ô-sô-fiz-ing), p. and a. Searching into the reasons of things, assigning reasons for phenomena; reasoning like a philosopher; as, a philosophizing spirit.

No philosophizing Christian ever organized or perpetuated a sect. Milman.

Philosophy (fil'ô-sô-fī), n. [Gr. philosophia, from philos, love, and sophia, wisdom.] 1. Lit. the love of wisdom, or search after wisdom. But in modern acceptation philosophy may be defined as the universal science which aims at an explanation of all the phenomena of the universe by ultimate causes; the knowledge of phenomena as explained by, and resolved into, causes and reasons, powers and laws. When applied to any particular department of knowledge, it denotes the collection of general laws or principles under which all the subordinate phenomena or facts relating to that subject are comprehended. Thus, that branch of philosophy which treats of God, &c., is called theology; that which treats of nature is called physics or natural philosophy; that which treats of duty is called ethics, or moral philosophy; that which treats of the mind is called intellectual or mental philosophy, or metaphysics. The terms philosophy of history, philosophy of manufactures, and other such terms are also used. All classes of objects, indeed, which can occupy the mind may have something in common, called their philosophy, which philosophy is nothing else than the general expression for that effort of the mind whereby it strives, pursuant to its laws, to reduce its knowledge to the form of ultimate truths or principles, and to determine the immutable relations which exist between things as it conceives them. The philosophy which comprises within itself all philosophies is that which labours to determine the laws or ultimate principles in obedience to which the mind itself operates; that which seeks to discover the ultimate foundation of all that it knows or conceives; to discover what it itself is, and what is its relation to all things, and so it strives to form a system out of all such ultimate laws or principles. Such a system may be called a philosophy in the absolute sense of the term, in which it is nearly equivalent to metaphysics.

Philosophy has been defined—the science of things divine and human, and the causes in which they are contained;—the science of effects by their causes;—the science of sufficient reasons;—the science of things possible, inasmuch as they are possible;—the science of things evidently deduced from first principles;—the science of truths sensible and abstract;—the application of reason to its legitimate objects;—the science of the relations of all knowledge to the necessary ends of human reason;—the science of the original form of the ego, or mental self;—the science of science;—the science of the absolute;—the science of the absolute indifference of the ideal and real. Sir W. Hamilton.

2. Hypothesis or system on which natural effects are explained; a particular philosophical system or theory.

There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, Than are dreamt of in your philosophy. Shak.

We shall in vain interpret their words by the notions of our philosophy and the doctrines in our schools. Locke.

3. Calm and unexcitable temper such as the Stoic philosophy teaches; practical wisdom; as, to bear misfortunes with philosophy.

Thy steady temper, Portius, Can look on guilt, rebellion, fraud, and Caesar, In the calm lights of mild philosophy. Addison.

4. Reasoning; argumentation. Milton.—5. Course of studies or aggregate of subjects required for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Germany or elsewhere, corresponding to 'Arts' in this country.

Philostorgy (fil'ô-stôr'ji), n. [Gr. philostorgia, from philos, loving, and storge, natural affection.] Natural affection; as, for example, that of a mother for her infant.

Philotechnic, Philotechnical (fil'ô-tek'nik, fil'ô-tek'nik-al), a. [Gr. philos, loving, and technē, art.] Having an attachment to the arts.

Philter, Philtre (fil'tēr), n. [Fr. philtre; Lit. philtrum; Gr. philttron, from phileo, to love.] A potion supposed by the ancients, and even by the ignorant of the present day, to have the power of exciting love.

Philter, Philtre (fil'tēr), v.t. pret. & pp. philtered, philtred; ppr. philtering, philtreing. 1. To impregnate with a love potion; as, to philter a draught.—2. To excite to love or animal desire by a potion. Dr. H. More.

Phimos (fi-mô'sis), n. [Gr. phimos, a muzzle.] A condition of the prepuce, in which it cannot be drawn back so as to uncover the glans-penis.

Phisike, n. Physic; medicine. Chaucer.

Physiomy (fiz'no-mi), n. [Shortened for physiognomy.] Physiognomy; expression or aspect of countenance; countenance.

When you marry I wish you such an inside of a wife; but from such an outward physiomy the Lord deliver you. Hovell.

Phiton, n. The serpent python. Chaucer.

Phitonness, n. A pythonesse; a witch. Chaucer.

Phiz (fiz), n. [A contr. of physiognomy.] The face or visage. Swift. [Humorous or contemptuous.]

Phlebitis (flē-bītis), n. [Gr. phleps, phlebos, a vein, and -itis, term. implying inflammation.] Inflammation of the inner membrane of a vein.

Phlebography (flē-bô-grā-fi), n. [Gr. phleps, a vein, and graphō, to describe.] A description of the veins. Dunglison.

Phlebolith (flē-bô-lith), n. [Gr. phleps, phlebos, a vein, and -lithos, a stone.] In med. a small calcareous concretion found in a vein.

Phlebology (flē-bô-lô-jī), n. [Gr. phleps, a vein, and logos, discourse.] That branch of anatomy which treats of the veins; a treatise on the veins. Dunglison.

Phleboteris (flē-bôp'tēr-is), n. [Gr. phleps, phlebos, a vein, and ptērís, a fern.] A genus of ferns from the oolite formation, characterized by their pinnae being in contact with each other at the base, and by their veins being separated on each side from the midrib by a space destitute of veins.

Phleborrhage, Phleborrhagia (flēb'or-rāj, flēb'or-rāj-i), n. [Gr. phleps, phlebos, a vein, and rhagē, a rupture.] In pathol. the rupture of a vein; venous hemorrhage. Dunglison.

Phlebotomist (flē-bôp'tō-mist), n. [See PHLEBOTOMY.] One that opens a vein for letting blood; a blood-letter.

Phlebotomize (flē-bôp'tō-miz), v.t. pret. & pp. phlebotomized; ppr. phlebotomizing. To let blood from, as a vein; to bleed by opening a vein. Hovell.

Phlebotomy (flē-bôp'tō-mī), n. [Fr. phlebotomie, Gr. phlebotomia—phleps, phlebos, a vein, and tomē, a cutting, from temnō, to cut.] The act or practice of opening a vein for letting blood, for the cure of diseases, or the preservation of health.

Phlegmatory is so much practised here, that if one's little finger ache they presently open a vein.

Howell.

Phlegm (flem), n. [Gr. phlegma, phlegmatos, a cold slimy humour in the body.] 1. Cold animal fluid; watery matter; one of the four humours of which the ancients supposed the blood to be composed.—2. In old chem. the aqueous, insipid, and inodorous products obtained by subjecting moist vegetable matter to the action of heat.—3. The thick viscid matter secreted in the digestive and respiratory passages, and discharged by coughing or vomiting; bronchial mucus.—4. Dulness; coldness; sluggishness; indifference.

They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm.

Pope.

Phlegmagogue (fleg'ma-gog), n. [Gr. phlegma, phlegm, and ago, to drive.] A term anciently used to denote a medicine supposed to possess the property of expelling phlegm.

Phlegmasia (fleg'mā-si-a), n. [Gr., from phlegō, to burn.] Inflammation.—Phlegmasia dolens, lit. a painful inflammation; puerperal tumid leg; an affection depending on inflammation of the iliac and femoral veins.

Phlegmatic, Phlegmatical (fleg-mat'ik, fleg-mat'ik-al), a. [Gr. phlegmatikos, from phlegma, phlegm.] 1. Abounding in phlegm; as, phlegmatic humours.

Cheating and smoking of tobacco is only proper for phlegmatic people.

Arbuthnot.

2. Generating phlegm. 'Cold and phlegmatic habitations.' Sir T. Browne.—3. Watery. 'Spirit of wine . . . grows by every distillation more and more aqueous and phlegmatic.' Newton.—4. Cold; dull; sluggish; heavy; not easily excited into action or passion; as, a phlegmatic temperament.

As the inhabitants are of a heavy phlegmatic temper, if any leading member has more fire than comes to his share, it is quickly tempered by the coldness of the rest.

Addison.

Phlegmatically, Phlegmatically (fleg-mat'ik-al-ly, fleg-mat'ik-il-ly), adv. In a phlegmatic manner; coldly; heavily. 'All the rest is phlegmatically passed over.' Warburton.

Phlegmon (fleg'mon), n. [Gr. phlegmonē, from phlegō, to burn.] In pathol. inflammation of the cellular tissue, accompanied with redness, circumscribed swelling, increased heat and pain; at first tensile and lancinating, afterwards pulsatory and heavy. It is apt to terminate in suppuration.

Phlegmonoid (fleg'mon-oid), a. Resembling phlegmon.

Phlegmonous (fleg'mon-us), a. Having the nature or properties of a phlegmon; being of the same specific inflammation as phlegmon; as, phlegmonous inflammation.

Phleme (flem), n. Same as Fleam.

Phleum (flē'um), n. A genus of grasses, chiefly natives of Europe. Various British species are known by the name of cat's-tail grass. Among these the P. pratense (meadow cat's-tail grass or timothy grass) is of considerable agricultural value as a fodder plant. It is a general inhabitant of the most fertile pastures, and is very like the meadow fox-tail in appearance, differing from it chiefly in having unequal glumes, and two paleae instead of one. It is very productive, especially in the early spring, and is a very general component of hay. It is of the greatest use when the object is to procure a sward of permanent herbage.

Phleum (flē'um), n. [Gr. phloios, bark.] In bot. the cellular portion of bark lying immediately under the epidermis. This cork is the phleum of the Quercus suber. It is also termed Epiphleum.

Phlogistian (flo-jis'ti-an), n. A believer in the existence of phlogiston.

Phlogistic (flo-jis'tik), a. [See PHLOGISTON.] 1. Pertaining, belonging, or relating to phlogiston. 'The mistakes committed in the celebrated phlogistic theory.' J. S. Mill.—2. In med. entonic or thenic, that is, attended with a preternatural degree of vital energy and strength of action in the heart and arteries.

Phlogisticate† (flo-jis'ti-kāt), v.t. To combine phlogiston with.—Phlogisticated air, the name given by the old chemists to nitrogen.—Phlogisticated alkali, prussiate of potash.—Phlogisticated gas, nitrogen or azote.

Phlogistication† (flo-jis'ti-kā'shon), n. The act or process of combining with phlogiston.

Phlogiston (flo-jis'ton), n. [Gr. phlogistos, from phlogizō, to burn or inflame—phlegō, to burn.] According to an obsolete theory, the supposed principle of inflammability; the matter of fire in composition with other bodies. Stahl gave this name to an hypothetical element which he supposed to be pure fire fixed in combustible bodies, in order to distinguish it from fire in action or in a state of liberty.

Phlomis (flō'mis), n. [From Gr. phlogmos, a flame—in reference to the down being used for wicks.] A genus of shrubs and herbaceous perennials, mostly European, and belonging to the nat. order Labiate. The P. fruticosa, or Jerusalem sage, is an ornamental plant common in our shrubberies.

Phlorizin, Phloridizin (flō'riz-in, flō-rīd'-zin), n. [From Gr. phloios, bark, and rhiza, root.] (C₂₁H₃₄O₁₀.) A substance discovered in the fresh bark of the root of the apple, pear, cherry, and plum tree. It forms fine colourless four-sided silky needles soluble in water. The solution has a bitter, slightly astringent taste. It has been used with success in intermittents.

Phlox (flok), n. [Gr. phlox, a flame, from phlegō, to burn, from the appearance of the flowers.] A North American genus of plants, nat. order Polemoniaceae. The species are elegant plants, with red, purple, or white flowers. The trailing kinds are admirably adapted for growing on rock-work.

Phlyctæna, Phlyctena (flik-tē'na), n. [Gr. phlyktaina, a blister, a pustule, from phlygō, to boil or swell over.] In med. a tumour formed by the accumulation of a serous fluid under the epidermis. Dunglison.

Phlyctænula (flik-tē'nū-lā), n. [Dim. of phlyctæna.] In med. a small transparent tumour of the eyelids. Dunglison.

Phlyctenular (flik-tē'nū-lēr), a. Pertaining to phlyctænula.—Phlyctenular ophthalmia, inflammation of the eye, accompanied with phlyctæna on the cornea.

Phobanthropy (fō-ban'thro-pi), n. [Gr. phobos, fear, and anthrōpos, a man.] A dread of mankind. West Rev.

Phoca (fō'ka), n. A Linnean genus of marine mammals, which includes the seals. See SEAL.

Phocæan (fō-kā'shē-an), n. A mammal belonging to the genus Phoca; a seal. Brande & Cox.

Phocæna (fō-sē'na), n. A genus of Cetacea, family Delphinidae, comprising the porpoises. See PORPOISE.

Phocal (fō'kal), a. Pertaining to the genus Phoca, which contains the seals.

Phocidæ (fō-si-dē), n.pl. A family of cetaceans, of which the seal (Phoca) is the type. It includes only those seals which have no external ears, the eared seals and the walrus being the types of two other families. The three families make up the order Pinnipedia, which answers to the Linnean genus Phoca.

Phocine (fō'sin), a. Pertaining to the seal tribe.

Phœbus (fē'bus), n. [Gr. Phoibos, lit. the brilliant one.] A name of Apollo, often used in the same sense as Sol, the sun.

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings
And Phœbus 'gins arise. Shak.

Phœnician (fē-nish'i-an), n. A native or inhabitant of Phœnicia, an ancient country on the coast of Syria.

Phœnician (fē-nish'i-an), a. Of or pertaining to Phœnicia.

Phœnicin (fē-ni-sin), n. [Gr. phœnia, purple.] Indigo purple. See PHENICIN.

Phœnicopter (fē-ni-kop'tēr), n. A bird of the genus Phœnicopterus.

Phœnicopteridæ (fē-ni-kop-ter'i-dē), n.pl. The flamingo family. See FLAMINGO, PHÆNICOPTERUS.

Phœnicopteros (fē-ni-kop'tēr-us), n. [Gr. phœnikopteros, red-feathered—a phœnikos, purple-red, and pteron, a wing.] A genus of palmipede or natatorial birds (the flamingoes), of the order Lamellirostres, and family Phœnicopteridæ. P. ruber (the common flamingo) occurs abundantly in Southern Europe. See FLAMINGO.

Phœnix (fē'niks), n. [Gr. phœnix, the bird; also the date-palm.] 1. According to the ancient Greek legend a wonderful female bird of great beauty which was said to live 500 or 600 years in the wilderness, when she built for herself a funeral pile of wood and aromatic gums, lighted it with the fanning of her wings, and then consumed herself; but from her ashes she revived again in the freshness of youth. Hence the phœnix often serves as an emblem of immortality. The phœnix is always drawn by the heralds in flames.

And glory, like the phœnix midst her fires,
Exhales her odours, blazes, and expires. Byron.

2. A paragon; a person of singular distinction or beauty.

But, O, my lord, that you could have seen my phœnix, Lovel—the very prince and chieftain of the youth of this age. Sir W. Scott.

3. One of the modern constellations in the northern hemisphere.—4. A genus of palms inhabiting India and the north of Africa. The P. dactylifera, or date-palm, is one of the best-known species. See DATE-PALM.

Pholadidæ (fō-lad'id-ē), n.pl. [See PHOLAS.] A family of lamellibranchiate bivalve molluscs, belonging to the subdivision Sinu-pallata of the section Siphonida, comprising the genera Pholas, Xylophaga, and Teredo. The characteristics are: shell gaping at both ends, without hinge or ligament, often with accessory valves; animal club-shaped, as in Pholas, or worm-like, as in Teredo, with a short truncated foot; mantle closed in front, and siphons long, united to near their extremities. The Pholades, or piddocks, as well as the eminently destructive Teredo navalis, are well-known types of the family. See PHOLAS, TEREDO.

Pholadite (fō'lā-dit), n. A petrified shell of the genus Pholas.

Pholadomya (fō-lā-dō-mi'a), n. [Gr. phōlas, the pholas, and mya, the gaper.] A genus of lamellibranch molluscs found fossil in the lias, oolite, and chalk formations. One species only (P. candida) is known to be now in existence, and it frequents the sea around Tortola.

Pholas (fō'las), n.pl. Pholades (fō'lā-dēz). [Gr. phōlas, from phōlēō, to lie concealed.] A genus of marine lamellibranchiate bivalves of the family Pholadidæ, popularly known along our coasts as piddocks. The pholades are found at depths varying to 9 fathoms; they pierce wood, rocks, indurated clay, &c., by rasping with their shell, which is armed in front with file or rasp-like imbrications. They have hence received the name of stone-borers. They are remarkably phosphorescent. See PHOLADIDÆ.

Pholidogaster (fō-lī-dō-gas-tēr), n. [Gr. pholis, pholidos, a scale, and gaster, a belly.] A genus of fossil labyrinthodonts discovered in the coal-measures at Gilmerton, near Edinburgh. From its great resemblance to a fish, the only species found has been named P. pisiformis.

Phonascetics (fō-nas-set'iks), n. [Gr. phōn-askēō, to practise the voice—phōnē, the voice, and askēō, to practise.] Systematic practice for strengthening the voice; treatment for improving or restoring the voice.

Phonate (fō'nāt), v.t. [From Gr. phōnē, sound, voice.] To utter sounds.

Phonograph (fō-nā'fō-graf), n. [Gr. phōnē, sound, autos, self, graphō, to write.] A music-recorder or similar device.

Phonographic (fō-nā'fō-graf'ik), a. Pertaining to the phonograph.

Phone (fōn). A colloquial abbreviation for Telephone, both as noun and as verb.

Phonetic (fō-net'ik), a. [Gr. phōnētikos, from phōnē, sound.] 1. Pertaining to the voice.

2. Pertaining to the representation of sounds; representing sounds; a term applied to alphabetic characters which represent articulate sounds; as a, b, in contradistinction to ideographic characters, which represent objects, or symbolically denote abstract ideas, as in the figurative part of the Egypt tian hieroglyphics. The term has been specifically applied to the method of writing and printing introduced by Mr. Isaac Pitman of Bath, and designated phonography and phonotypy (which see).

Phonetical (fō-net'ik-al), a. Same as Phonetic.

Phonetically (fō-net'ik-al-li), adv. In a phonetic manner; in a manner expressive of sounds or letters.

Phonetics (fō-net'iks), n. The doctrine of sounds; the representation of sounds, especially those of the human voice; phonetics, the science which treats of the sounds of the human voice, and the art of representing their combinations by writing.

Phonetist (fon'e-tist), n. Same as Phonologist.

Phonetization (fō-net-iz-ā'shon), n. The act or art of representing sound by phonetic signs. [Rare.]

Phonic (fōn'ik), a. Pertaining to sound. See PHONICS.

Phonics (fōn'iks), n. [Gr. phōnē, sound.] 1. The doctrine or science of sounds, especially those of the human voice; phonetics. 2. The art of combining musical sounds.

Phonocampic (fō-nō-kamp'tik), a. [Gr. phōnē, sound, and kampō, to infect.] Having the power to infect sound, or turn it from its direction, and thus to alter it. Derham.

Phonogram (fō-nō-gram), n. [Gr. phōnē, the voice, and gramma, a letter.] The sound of the human voice or musical sounds as reproduced by the phonograph.

Phonograph (fō-nō-graf), n. [See PHONOGRAPHY.] 1. A type or character for expressing a sound; a character used in phonography. —2. An instrument by means of which sounds can be permanently registered, and afterwards reproduced from the register. It consists essentially of a curved tube, one end of which is fitted with a mouthpiece, while the other end (about 2 inches in diameter) is closed in with a disc or diaphragm of exceedingly thin metal.

Connected with the centre of this diaphragm is a steel point, which, when the sounds are projected on the disc from the mouthpiece, vibrates backwards and forwards. This part of the apparatus is adjusted to a cylinder which rotates on a horizontal axis. On the surface of the cylinder is cut a spiral groove, and on the axis there is a spiral screw of the same pitch, which works in a nut. When the instrument is to be used a piece of tinfoil is gummed round the cylinder, and the steel point is adjusted so as to be just touching the tinfoil, and above the line of the spiral groove. If some words are now spoken through the mouthpiece, and the cylinder kept rotating either by the hand or clock-work, a series of small marks are made on the foil by the vibratory movement of the steel point, and these markings have all an individual character of their own, due to the various sounds addressed to the mouthpiece. The sounds thus registered are reproduced by approaching the diaphragm and its steel point towards the tinfoil as at first commencing, at the point where it was when the cylinder originally started. The indentations previously made now cause the steel point to rise or fall or otherwise move as the markings pass under it, and the result is that the diaphragm is thrown into a state of vibration exactly corresponding to the movements induced by the markings, and thus affects the air around so as to produce sounds, and these vibrations being exactly similar to those originally made by the voice, necessarily reproduce these sounds to the ear as the words at first spoken.

In Edison's improved phonograph, tubes of wax are used instead of the tinfoil, the cylinder fitting into the inside of the tube, and the markings being made on the surface of the wax, which can be shaved down to receive a fresh set of markings when required.

Phonographer (fō-nog'raf-ēr), n. One versed in phonography.

Phonographic, Phonographical (fō-nō-graf'ik, fō-nō-graf'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to or based upon phonography. —2. Pertaining to the phonograph.

Phonographically (fō-nō-graf'ik-al-li), adv. In a phonographic manner; according to phonography.

Phonographist (fō-nog'raf-ist), n. One who is versed in phonography; a phonographer.

Phonography (fō-nog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. phōnē, a sound, and graphō, to write.] 1. The description of the sounds uttered by the organs of speech. —2. The representation of sounds by characters each of which represents one sound and always the same sound; especially, a system of shorthand invented by Mr. (latterly Sir) Isaac Pitman of Bath. This system, which has come into very extensive use, is purely phonetic, the ordinary spelling of words being disregarded, and the words being written with symbols intended to give only the necessary sounds, and these in such a way that they cannot be mistaken. The alphabet consists of straight lines, curves, dots, &c.

Phonolite (fō-nō-lit), n. [Gr. phōnē, sound, and lithos, stone.] Sounding stone; a name proposed as a substitute for clinkstone.

Phonologer (fō-nol'o-jēr), n. Same as Phonologist.

Phonologic, Phonological (fō-nō-loj'ik, fō-nō-loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to phonology.

Phonologist (fō-nol'o-jist), n. One versed in phonology.

Phonology (fō-nol'o-ji), n. [Gr. phōnē, sound, voice, and logos, discourse.] The science or doctrine of the elementary sounds uttered by the human voice, which shows how they are respectively formed, the distinctions between them, &c.; phonetics.

Phonometer (fō-nom'e-tēr), n. [Gr. phōnē, sound, voice, and metron, a measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the number of vibrations of a given sound in a given space of time.

Phonorganon, Phonorganum (fō-nor'gan-on, fō-nor'ga-num), n. [Gr. phōnē, the voice, and organon, an instrument.] An instrument formed to imitate vocal sounds or speech; a speaking machine.

Phonotype (fō-nō-tip), n. A type or character used in phonetic printing.

Phonotypic (fō-nō-tip'ik), a. Pertaining to phonotypy; as, a phonotypic alphabet; phonotypic writing or printing.

Phonotypical (fō-nō-tip'ik-al), a. Same as Phonotypic.

Phonotypy (fō-not'i-pi), n. [Gr. phōnē, sound, and typos, an impression, mark, or type.] A method of representing each of the sounds of speech by a distinct printed character or letter; phonetic printing.

Phoranthium (fō-ran'thi-um), n. [Gr. phorēō, to bear, and anthos, a flower.] In bot. a term sometimes applied to the receptacle of composite plants. Also called Clinanthium.

Phorminx (for'mings), n. [Gr.] An ancient Grecian lute or lyre.

We beat the phorminx till we hurt our thumbs,
As if still ignorant of counterpoint.

E. A. Browning.

Phormium (for'mi-um), n. [From Gr. phormē, a basket, from the purpose to which the plant is put in its native country.] The flax-plant or flax-lily, a genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Liliaceae. The principal species, P. tenax, is indigenous in New Zealand and Norfolk Island.

It grows in great tufts with sword-shaped leaves, sometimes 6 feet long. The long spike, bearing a large number of yellow flowers, rises from the centre of the leaves. The thick leathery leaves contain a large quantity of good strong fibre, which is used by the natives of New Zealand for making cloth, nets, &c., and would be very valuable in commerce but for a gummy matter in the leaves which it is difficult to get rid of. It has been introduced into Europe to take the place of hemp. Called also New-Zealand Flax.

Phoronomia (for-ō-nō-mi-a), n. Same as Phoronomics.

Phoronomics (for-ō-nom'iks), n. [Gr. phorēō, to bear or carry, and nomos, a law.] A term sometimes used to denote that branch of mechanics which treats of bodies in motion; kinematics.

Phoronomy (fō-ron'o-mi), n. Same as Phoronomics.

Phorus (fō'rus), n. [Gr. phoros, bearing, from phorēō, to bear.] A genus of turbinated, gastropod molluscs, inhabiting the Javan and China seas. P. agglutinans is remarkable for the singular habit of accumulating, during its formation, different substances, as stones, corals, small shells, &c., which adhere to its shell. From this circumstance it has received the name of the carrier-shell. The specimens with shells adhering to them are called by collectors conchologists; while those with stones are named mineralogists. Called also Xenophorus.

Phosgen, Phosgene (fos'jen, fos'jēn), a. [Gr. phōs, light, and gennaō, to generate.] Generating light. — Phosgen gas, a gas generated by the action of light on chlorine and carbonic oxide gas. It is composed of carbon, oxygen, and chlorine in the proportions expressed by the formula COCl₂.

Phosphate (fos'fat), n. [See PHOSPHORUS.] A salt of phosphoric acid; a salt formed by the union of phosphoric anhydride with bases or water or both. Several phosphates are met with in nature; as those of calcium, aluminium, manganese, iron, uranium, copper, and lead. Phosphate of calcium constitutes the base of the bones of animals. Phosphates are largely used as manures.

Phosphatic (fos-fat'ik), a. Partaking of the nature of a phosphate; containing a phosphate. — Phosphatic diathesis, a morbid state of the constitution, characterized by the formation of the phosphates of magnesia, ammonia, and lime, which are generally evidenced by being deposited in the urine.

Phosphene (fos'fen), n. [Gr. phōs, light, and phainō, to show.] The luminous image produced by pressing the eyeball with the finger. It is doubtful whether this effect arises from the excitation of the retina, or whether it is not rather the result of violence to the fibres of the optic nerve apart from the retina. The flashes seen on receiving a blow on the eye are due to the same cause.

Phosphide (fos'fid), n. A combination of phosphorus with a single element; as, phosphide of iron or copper.

Phosphine (fos'fin), n. Same as Phosphuretted Hydrogen. See PHOSPHURETTED.

Phosphite (fos'fit), n. A salt of phosphoric acid.

Phospholite (fos'fol-it), n. [Gr. phosphoros, phosphorus, and lithos, a stone.] In mineral. an earth united with phosphoric acid.

Phosphor (fos'for), n. [Gr. phōs — phōs, light (from phao, to shine), and phērō, to bring. See PHOSPHORUS.] 1. Phosphorus.

Of lambent flame you have whole sheets in a handful of phosphor. Addison.

2. The morning star or Lucifer; Venus, when it precedes the sun and shines in the morning; Phosphorus.

Bright Phosphor, fresher for the night,
By thee the world's great work is heard Beginning. Tennyson.

Phosphorate (fos'for-āt), v.t. pret. & pp. phosphorated; ppr. phosphorating. To combine or impregnate with phosphorus.

Phosphor-bronze (fos'for-bronz), n. An alloy of copper, tin, and phosphorus, capable of being made tough and malleable, or hard, according to the proportion of the several ingredients. It has great power in resisting straining, and is made into bearings for machinery, cog-wheels, guns, hammers, cutlery, wire, sheathing for sea-going vessels, &c. E. H. Knight.

Phosphoreous (fos-fō'rē-us), a. Same as Phosphorescent. Pennant.

Phosphoresce (fos-fō-res'), v.i. pret. phosphoresced; ppr. phosphorescing. [See PHOSPHORUS.] To shine, as phosphorus, by exhibiting a faint light without sensible heat; to give out a phosphoric light.

Arenaceous limestone phosphoresces in the dark when scraped with a knife. Kirwan.

Phosphorescence (fos-fō-res'ens), n. The state or quality of being phosphorescent; the property which certain bodies possess of becoming luminous without undergoing combustion. Phosphorescence is sometimes a chemical, sometimes a physical action. When chemical, it consists essentially in slow oxidation attended with evolution of light; when physical, it consists in the emission of light previously absorbed, or in the transformation of heat rays into light rays. The phosphorescence of the sea is produced ch, chain; ch, Sc. loch; g, go; j, job;

ū, Fr. ton; ng, sing; TH, then; th, thin;

w, wlg; wh, whlg; zh, azure.—See KEY.

by the scintillating or phosphorescent light emitted from the bodies of certain marine animals, and is well seen on the surface of the ocean at night. See extract.

The diffused luminosity of the sea is mainly due to the Noctiluca miliaris; but its partial luminosity is due to various phosphorescent animals, amongst which are the Physalia utriculus (the Portuguese man-of-war), Medusa, Tunicata, Annelides, &c. The cause of phosphorescence is variously stated, it being supposed very generally to be the result of a process of slow combustion analogous to that which takes place in phosphorus when exposed to the atmosphere. Upon the whole, however, it appears that the phenomenon is a vital process, consisting essentially in the conversion of nervous force (vital energy) into light; just as the same forces can be converted by certain fishes into electricity.

H. A. Nicholson.

Phosphorescent (fos-for'es-ent), a. Shining with a faint light or luminosity like that of phosphorus; luminous without sensible heat. Various animals are phosphorescent, as the glowworm, the phosphorescent seapen (Pennatula phosphorea), and the brilliant pyrosoma. Fish also possess this property in a remarkable degree. A number of mineral substances exhibit the same property, as chloride of calcium, anhydrous nitrate of lime, some carbonates and sulphates of baryta, strontia, and lime, the diamond, some varieties of fluor-spar, apatite, borax, and many other substances. Some mineral bodies become phosphorescent when strongly heated, as a piece of lime. The same property is observable in decayed wood. See PHOSPHORESCENCE.

Phosphoretic (fos'fo-ret-ed), a. Same as Phosphoretic.

Phosphoric (fos-for'ik), a. Pertaining to, obtained from, or resembling phosphorus; phosphorescent.

How the lit lake shines, a phosphoric sea.

And the big rain comes dancing to the earth.

Byron.

—Phosphoric acid (PH_3O_4), an acid usually obtained by burning phosphuretted hydrogen in atmospheric air or oxygen. It is also produced by the oxidation of phosphorous acid, by oxidizing phosphorus with nitric acid, by the decomposition of apatite and other native phosphates, and in various other ways. It is tribasic, forming three distinct classes of metallic salts, and the three atoms of hydrogen may in like manner be replaced by alcohol radicals, forming acid and neutral ethers. Phosphoric acid is used in medicine in the form of solution, constituting the dilute acid of the Pharmacopoeia. It is peculiarly suited to disordered states of the mucous surfaces, and also to states of debility, characterized by softening of the bones.

Phosphorical (fos-for'ik-al), a. Phosphoric. Phosphorite (fos-for'it), n. A species of calcareous earth; a sub-species of apatite. It is an amorphous phosphate of lime.

Phosphoritic (fos-for'it'ik), a. Pertaining to phosphorite, or of the nature of phosphorite.

Phosphorize (fos-for'iz), v.t. To combine or impregnate with phosphorus. Dana.

Phosphoroscope (fos-for'ô-skôp), n. An instrument designed to show the phosphorescence of certain bodies, such as uranium compounds, that emit light but for a very short period.

Phosphorous (fos-for-us), a. Pertaining to or obtained from phosphorus.—Phosphorous acid (H_3PO_3), an acid produced by the action of water on phosphorous anhydride, by exposing sticks of phosphorus to moist air, and in several other ways. Phosphorous acid exists usually in the form of a thick uncrystallizable syrup, but it may also be obtained crystallized. This acid is basic, forming two series of metallic salts, named respectively neutral and acid phosphites.—Phosphorous anhydride (P_2O_3), a soft, white, readily volatile powder, prepared by burning phosphorus in a limited supply of air.

Phosphorus (fos-for-us), n. [L. phosphorus, Gr. phosphoros, the morning-star, lit. light-bringer, from phôs, light, and phêrô, to bring. The chemical substance has this name from its character.] 1. The morning-star; Phosphor (which see).—2. Sym. P. At. wt. 31. sp. gr. 1.826. A solid non-metallic combustible substance, hitherto undecomposed, occurring chiefly in combination with oxygen, calcium, and magnesium, in volcanic and other rocks, whose disintegration constitutes our fertile soils. It exists also in the plants used by man as food, and is a never-failing and important constituent in animal structures. It was originally obtained from urine; but it is now manufactured from bones, which consist in part of phosphate of lime. Common phosphorus when pure is almost transparent and colourless. At common temperatures it is a soft solid, easily cut with a knife, and the cut surface has a waxy lustre; at 108° it fuses, and at 550° is converted into vapour. It is soluble, by the aid of heat, in naphtha, in fixed and volatile oils, in the chloride of sulphur, sulphide of carbon, and sulphide of phosphorus. It is exceedingly inflammable. Exposed to the air at common temperatures it undergoes slow combustion, emits a white vapour of a peculiar alliaceous odour, appears luminous in the dark, and is gradually consumed. On this account phosphorus should always be kept under water. A very slight degree of heat is sufficient to inflame phosphorus in the open air. Gentle pressure between the fingers, friction, or a temperature not much above its point of fusion, kindles it readily. It burns rapidly even in the air, emitting a splendid white light, and causing intense heat. Its combustion is far more rapid in oxygen gas, and the light far more vivid. The product of the perfect combustion of phosphorus is phosphorous pentoxide (P_2O_5), a white solid which readily takes up water, passing into phosphoric acid (which see). Phosphorus may be made to combine with most of the metals, forming compounds called phosphides; when dissolved in fat oils it forms a solution which is luminous in the dark. It is chiefly used in the preparation of lucifer-matches, and also in the preparation of phosphoric acid. It is of all stimulants the most powerful and diffusible, but on account of its activity highly dangerous. It can be safely administered as a medicine only in extremely minute doses, and with the utmost possible caution. Phosphorus presents a good example of allotropy (see ALLOTROPY), in that it can be exhibited in at least one other form, known as red or amorphous phosphorus, presenting completely different properties from common phosphorus. This variety is produced by keeping common phosphorus a long time slightly below the boiling-point. It is a red, hard, brittle substance, not fusible, not poisonous, and not readily inflammable, so that it may be handled with impunity. When heated to the boiling-point it changes back to common phosphorus.—Bolognian phosphorus, calcined native sulphate of barytes, one of the most powerful of the solar phosphoric substances. When heated with charcoal, and exposed to the sun's rays, it emits light in the dark for some hours.—Phosphorus bottle, (a) a contrivance for obtaining instantaneous light. The light is produced by stirring a piece of phosphorus about in a dry bottle with a hot wire, and introducing a sulphur match. It is now superseded by lucifer matches and similar contrivances. (b) A 1-oz. phial containing 12 grains phosphorus melted in $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. olive-oil. On this being uncorked in the dark it emits light enough to read the dial of a watch, and it will retain this property for several years if not too frequently used.—Phosphorus paste, a poisonous composition for the destruction of vermin, as rats, mice, cockroaches, &c.

Phosphuret (fos-fû-ret), n. The name formerly given to phosphide (which see).

Phosphuretted (fos-fû-ret-ed), a. Combined with phosphorus.—Phosphuretted hydrogen (PH_3), a gas procured by boiling phosphorus in a solution of a caustic alkali. The gas which arises is spontaneously inflammable; and during its combustion there are formed water and phosphoric acid. It is colourless, and has a disagreeable smell resembling that of onions. When mixed with air or oxygen gas it explodes at a temperature of 300°. It is produced by the decomposition of animal substances. When this gas is cooled below zero (C.) it deposits a liquid phosphide of hydrogen; the gaseous phosphide remaining is no longer spontaneously inflammable.

Phosphyttrite (fos-ft'rit), n. Phosphate of yttria, a very rare mineral substance.

Photel (fô'tel), n. A tree nearly akin to and closely resembling the banana-tree.

Photics (fô'tiks), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light.] That department of science which treats of light. E. H. Knight.

Photizite (fô'tiz-it), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light.] A mineral, an oxide of manganese.

Photochemical (fô-tô-kem'ik-al), a. Pertaining to the chemical action of light.

Photo-electrotype (fô'tô-ê-lek-trô-tip), n. A process in which a photographic picture is produced in relief so as to afford, by electro-deposition, a matrix for a cast, from which impressions in ink may be obtained.

Photo-engraving (fô'tô-en-gräv-ing), n. A common name of many processes in which the action of light on a sensitized surface is made to change the nature or condition of the substance of the plate or its coating, so that it may by processes be made to afford a printing surface corresponding to the original from which the photographic image was derived. See PHOTOGRAPHY.

Photo-galvanography (fô'tô-gal-va-nog-ra-fî), n. The art or process of obtaining from a photographic negative on glass, by means of a gutta-percha impression, an electrolyte plate, from which may be taken, as in copper-plate printing, any number of copies.

Photogen (fô'tô-jen), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and gênêin, to produce.] Same as Paraffin-oil.

Photogene (fô'tô-jên), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and gênêin, to produce.] A more or less continued impression or picture on the retina. H. Spencer.

Photogenic (fô'tô-jen'ik), a. Of or pertaining to photogeny or to photogenes.

Photogeny (fô'tô-jen'ik), n. (See PHOTOGEN.)

1. The origin or production of light, especially phosphorescent light.—2. Photography.

Photoglyphic (fô'tô-gli'f'ik), a. Relating to photoglyphy or to the art of engraving by means of light; as, a photoglyphic engraving.

Photoglyphy (fô'tô-gli'f'ik), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and glyphô, to engrave.] The art of engraving by means of the action of light and certain chemicals; a method of engraving by which photographs and other transparent designs can be etched into steel, copper, or zinc plates, by the action of light and certain chemicals. A mixture consisting of a solution of gelatine in water and a saturated solution of bichromate of potash is poured on the plate and allowed to dry. It is then placed in a printing frame with the object it is desired to copy laid on it, and exposed to the action of light. Hydrochloric acid is next poured on the plate, which attacks only the parts which the light has not acted on, thus etching in the design of the object superimposed. It is the invention of Mr. Fox Talbot.

Photogram (fô'tô-gram), n. Same as Photograph. [Rare.]

Photograph (fô'tô-graf), v.t. To produce a likeness or facsimile of by photographic means.

Photographer (fô'tô-graf-er), n. One who takes pictures by means of photography.

Photographic (fô'tô-graf'ik), a. Relating to photography or the art of making pictures by the aid of sunlight.—Photographic printing, the process of obtaining positives on sensitized paper from transparent negatives by exposure to light in a printing frame. See PHOTOGRAPHY.

Photographical (fô'tô-graf'ik-al), a. Same as Photographic.

Photographer (fô'tô-graf'ist), n. Same as Photographer.

Photographometer (fô'tô-gra-fom'et-er), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, graphô, to describe, and metron, measure.] In photog. an instrument for determining the sensibility of each tablet employed in the photographic process, relatively to the amount of radiation, luminous and chemical.

Photography (fô'tô-gra-fî), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and graphô, to describe,] 1. The science of the action of light on bodies; the principles of physics and chemistry which relate to the production of pictures by the action of light.—2. The art of delineating objects by the action of light. The name, however, as applied to the process of producing pictures by the sun's rays, rests on a misconception. The true light-giving rays of the sun have no influence in altering the chemical condition of bodies and thereby of producing those changes in their colour on which photography depends. Recent investigations prove that these changes are produced to some extent by the feebly luminous blue and violet rays of the spectrum, but chiefly by other rays which are absolutely dark or invisible. The epithet actinic, fluorescent, or chemical has been applied to theserays. (See ACTINISM.) The principle on which photography depends reaches back to the time of the alchemists, who discovered that chloride of silver exposed to the sun's rays became black. Wedgewood and Davy in 1802 attempted to apply this fact to artistic purposes by throwing the shadow of an object on a sheet of white paper, or, preferably, of leather, covered with a solution of nitrate of silver and exposed to the sun's rays, but they were unable to fix the pictures. About 1814 M. Niepce, in France, discovered a method of producing pictures on plates of copper or pewter, covered with a sensitive resinous substance called bitumen of Judea, and also of rendering them permanent. This process he called heliography. M. Niepce associated himself with M. Daguerre, who elaborated on his process the very beautiful one which bears his name. (See DAQUERRETYPE.) This process has been superseded by two processes, viz. the calotype process of Mr. Fox Talbot, first patented in 1841, who revived Mr. Wedgewood's process of obtaining pictures on sensitized paper (see CALOTYPE), and the collodion process, first suggested by M. Le Grey, of Paris, and introduced by Mr. Archer in 1850. (See COLLODION.) Calotype and collodion photographs may be negative or positive. Negative photographs exhibit the lights and shades contrary to nature, that is, the lights dark and shades white; positive photographs exhibit them in accordance with nature. To produce a positive, the negative is placed on the sensitive surface of a sheet of paper, and a piece of glass pressed on both to insure contact. The sunlight penetrates the negative and darkens the parts of the underlying paper opposite the lights of the picture, whilst the parts opposite the opaque parts of the picture (the lights of nature) are protected. The process for obtaining a positive from a negative is called printing. In the Niepcotype process albumen is used as the basis of the film in place of collodion. Many modifications are constantly being introduced into photography, as the carbon process, popularized by Mr. Swan of Newcastle, whose plan was to prepare a solution of gelatine and bichromate of potash (the latter being the sensitizing agent), mixed with some black pigment, and apply the mixture as a coating to a sheet of paper, and print his positives on the black cake, or tissue as it is called, thus produced. The autotype process, invented by Mr. Johnson, is a more simple and ready method of carbon-printing than the carbon process proper, but the principles involved are the same. Various modes of multiplying photographic pictures by what is termed photo-lithography have been successfully tried. For a mode of multiplying pictures by litho-photography from a hardened tissue, similar to that employed in the carbon process, see under HELIOTYPE. In Mr. Woodbury's engraving process the hardened tissue is brought into contact with a plate of type metal under considerable pressure. The plate takes the impression of the relief, and pictures are printed from it instead of from the raised tissue.

Photogravure (fô'tô-gra-vûr'), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and gr. gravure, engraving.] A process for producing engraved plates partly or wholly by photography.

Photo-lithography (fô'tô-li-thog'ra-fi), n. The art of engraving on stone by means of the action of light and of certain chemicals: specifically, the process of producing copies of photographs and other transparent designs on prepared stone, analogous to that of producing such copies on metal, described under photography. See PHOTOGRAPHY.

Photologic, Photological (fô'tô-loj'ik, fô'tô-loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to photology, or the doctrine of light.

Photology (fô'tô-loj'i), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and logos, discourse.] The doctrine or science of light, explaining its nature and phenomena.

Photomagnetism (fô'tô-mag'net-izm), n. The relation of magnetism to light. Fara-day.

Photometer (fô'tom'et-ër), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and metron, measure.] An instrument intended to indicate the different quantities of light, as in a cloudy or bright day, or between bodies illuminated in different degrees. All such instruments have for essential purpose the determination of the relative distances at which two sources produce equal intensities of illumination. One of the most common photometers is that of Bunsen, which consists of a screen of white paper with a grease-spot in its centre. The lights to be compared are placed on opposite sides of this screen, and their distances are so adjusted that the grease-spot appears neither brighter nor darker than the rest of the paper, from whatever side it is viewed. When the distances have not been correctly adjusted, the grease-spot will appear darker than the rest of the paper when viewed from the side on which the illumination is most intense, and lighter than the rest of the paper when viewed from the other side. The intensities of the two lights are to one another as the squares of the distances from the screen at which they must be placed in order that the grease-spot may appear neither brighter nor darker than the rest of the paper.

Photometric, Photometrical (fô'tô-met'rik, fô'tô-met'rik-al), a. Pertaining to or made by a photometer.

Photometry (fô'tom'et-ri), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and metron, a measure.] The measurement of the relative amounts of light emitted by different sources, consisting in determining the relative distances at which two sources produce equal intensities of illumination.

Photo-micrography (fô'tô-mi-krog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, micros, small, and graphô, to write.] The art or process of enlarging minute objects by means of the microscope, and projecting the enlarged image on a sensitized collodion film.

Photophobia (fô'tô-fô'bi-a), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and phobos, dread.] An intolerance or dread of light. It is a disease of nervous irritability, and one of excitement of the visual nerve in particular.

Photopsia, Photopsy (fô'top'si-a, fô'top'si), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and opsis, sight.] A morbid affection of the eyes, in which sparks of fire or flashes of light seem to play before them.

Photo-relief (fô'tô-re-lêf), n. A term applied to a process for obtaining by photographic means and subsequent manipulations a printing surface in relief to receive the ink and communicate impressions. See PHOTOGRAPHY, PHOTO-ENGRAVING, &c.

Photo-sculpture (fô'tô-sulp'tûr), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and E. sculpture.] The process of sculpturing statuettes, medallions, and the like, by the aid of photography. The person whose likeness is to be taken is placed in the centre of a circular room, in the wall of which there are twenty-four equidistant circular holes only large enough to permit the action of a camera lens through each, while in a dark passage outside the wall there are twenty-four cameras, each of which receives the image of that portion of the person towards which its lens is directed. The subject is thus photographed all round. The pictures thus received are then so arranged that in a neighbouring room they can be projected in succession by means of a magic lantern on a transparent screen. The sculptor works behind this screen on a piece of modelling clay, turning it round as he works, and copying the figures produced on the screen successively by means of a pantograph, which has its reducing point armed with a moulding or cutting tool, so that, as the longer arm is tracing each figure on the screen the shorter one is reproducing it on the clay.

Photosphere (fô'tô-sfêr), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and E. sphere.] An envelope of light; specifically, the luminous envelope, supposed to consist of incandescent matter, surrounding the sun. According to Kirchhoff the sun's photosphere is either solid or liquid, and is surrounded by an extensive non-luminous atmosphere, composed of gases and vapours of the substances incandescent in the photosphere.

Phototype (fô'tô-tip), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, and typos, a type.] A type or plate of the same nature as an engraved plate produced from a photograph by a peculiar process, as by photoglyphy or photolithography, and from which copies can be printed; also, the process by which such a plate is produced.

Photo-xylography (fô'tô-zi-log'ra-fi), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, xylos, a log of wood, and graphô, to write.] The process of producing an impression of an object on wood by photography and subsequent processes and then printing from the block.

Photo-zincography (fô'tô-zing-kog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. phôs, phôtos, light, E. zinc, and Gr. graphô, to write.] The process of projecting an impression on a plate of prepared zinc by photography and then engraving it by etching with acids, so that copies can be printed from the plate. This process was invented by Sir Henry James, and is extensively employed in the ordnance survey department at Southampton. It is in principle the same as photolithography.

Phragma (frag'ma), n. [Gr., a fence.] In bot. a spurious dissepiment in fruit.

Phragmacone (frag'ma-kôn), n. [Gr. phragma, a partition, and kônos, a cone.] The internal chambered shell of some cephalopoda, as Spirula and the belemnites.

Phragmites (frag-mi'têz), n. [From Gr. phragmos, a hedge; forming hedges.] A genus of plants including some eighteen species, known as reeds, tall, handsome grasses, with annual stems, and a perennial root, found by the margins of streams and lakes. They occur throughout Europe, and in Siberia, Japan, North America, and Australia, forming thick coverts, and yielding an abundance of strong durable grass, of great value for thatching roofs. P. communis, the only British species, is the largest grass of this country.

Phrase (frâz), v.i. To use coaxing or wheedling language. [Scotch.]

Phrasing (frâz'ing), p. and a. Cajoling; coaxing; palavering; making long or fine speeches. [Scotch.]

Phrase (frâz), n. [Gr. phrasis, a phrase, from phrazô, to speak.] 1. A brief expression; a single word, or more generally two or more words forming a complete expression by themselves or being a portion of a sentence. 'Mollify damnation with a phrase.' Dryden.

'Convey,' the wise it call. 'Steal' foh! a fco for the phrase! Shak.

2. A peculiar or characteristic expression; a mode of expression peculiar to a language; an idiom. 'Sweet household talk and phrases of the hearth.' Tennyson.—3. The manner or style in which a person expresses himself; diction. 'Thou speak'st in better phrase.' Shak.—4. In music, a short part of a composition occupying a distinct rhythmical period of from two to four bars, but sometimes extended to five and even more. Two phrases generally make up a sentence closed by a perfect cadence.

Phrase (frâz), v.t. pret. & pp. phrased; ppr. phrasing. To call; to style; to express in words or in peculiar words. 'These suns, for so they phrase them.' Shak.

Phrase (frâz), v.t. 1. To employ peculiar phrases or forms of speech; to express one's self. 'So Saint Cyprian phraseeth.' Prynne. [Rare.]—2. In music, to render music properly with reference to its melodic form; to bring into due prominence the grouping of tones into figures, phrases, sentences, &c.

Phrase-book (frâz'buk), n. A book in which phrases or the idioms of a language are collected and explained.

Phraseless (frâz'les), a. Not to be expressed or described. Shak.

Phraseogram (frâ'zê-ô-gram), n. [Gr. phrasis, phrasêos, a phrase, and gramma, a letter.] In photography, a combination of shorthand characters to represent a phrase or sentence.

Phraseologic, Phraseological (frâ'zê-ô-loj'ik, frâ'zê-ô-loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to phraseology; consisting of a peculiar form of words.

Phraseologist (frâ'zê-ol'o-jist), n. 1. A stickler for a particular form of words or phraseology; a coiner of phrases. 'A mere phraseologist.' Guardian.—2. A collector of phrases.

Phraseology (frâ'zê-ol'o-jî), n. [Gr. phrasis, a phrase, and legô, to speak.] 1. Manner of expression; peculiar words or phrases used in a sentence; diction.—2. A collection of phrases in a language.—Diction, Phraseology, Style. See DICTION.—SYN. Diction, expression, style, language.

Phratry (frâ'tri), n. [Gr. phratris.] In ancient Athens, a section of the people, being a subdivision of the phylê or tribe.

Phrenesiac (fre-ne-si'ak), a. Same as Phrenetic. 'Like an hypochondriac person, or, as Burton's Anatomy hath it, a phrenesiast or lethargic patient.' Sir W. Scott.

Phrenetic (fre-net'ik), a. [L. phreneticus, from Gr. phrenitikos, suffering from phrenitis or inflammation of the brain. See PHRENSY.] Having the mind disordered; frenzied; frantic; frenetic. Butler.

Phrenetic (fre-net/'ik), n. A frantic or frenzied person; one whose mind is disordered.

Phrenetics imagine they see that without which their imagination is affected with within. Harvey.

Phrenetically (fre-net/'ik-al-i), adv. In a phrenetic manner.

Phrenic (fren/'ik), a. [From Gr. phrenes, the diaphragm.] In anat. belonging to the diaphragm; as, a phrenic vein.

Phrenic (fren/'ik), n. A mental disease; a medicine or remedy for such a disease.

Phrenics (fren/'iks), n. [Gr. phrēnos, the mind.] Mental philosophy; metaphysics. R. Parke. [Rare.]

Phrenitis (fre-n/'tis), n. [Gr., from phrēn, the mind, and -itis, term denoting inflammation.] 1. In med., an inflammation of the brain or of the meninges of the brain, attended with acute fever and delirium. —2. Delirium; phrensy or frenzy.

Phrenologer (fre-nol'o-jér), n. A phrenologist.

Phrenologic, Phrenological (fren-ō-loj/'ik, fren-ō-loj/'ik-al), a. Pertaining to phrenology.

Phrenologically (fren-ō-loj/'ik-al-i), adv. In a phrenological manner; according to the principles of phrenology.

Phrenologist (fre-nol'o-jist), n. One versed in phrenology.

Phrenology (fre-nol'o-jī), n. [Gr. phrēn, the mind, and logos, discourse.] The science of the human mind. But the term is now restricted to a doctrine founded on a presumed knowledge of the functions of different portions of the brain obtained by comparing their relative forms and magnitudes in different individuals with the propensities and intellectual powers which these individuals are found respectively to possess. The doctrine which is the basis of phrenology was first propounded by Dr. Gall, a physician of Vienna, and subsequently by Dr. Spurzheim, Dr. A. Combe, George Combe, and others. The doctrine is based on the idea that the brain is an aggregation of parts or organs, and that each organ has a distinct and separate function in the evolution of mind or mental acts. The faculties are usually divided into two orders—feelings and intellect, or affective and intellectual faculties. The feelings are divided into two genera—the propensities and the sentiments; while the intellectual faculties are divided into the perceptive or knowing and the reflective faculties. In the subjoined figures the different organs (most of them double) are marked out and numbered, according to the system of Spurzheim. Frey and Hitzig in Germany and Ferrier and others in England have endeavoured to prove experimentally that certain functions are localized in certain parts of the brain, and their experiments have had some success.

Phreno - magnetism (fren-ō-mag-'net-izm), n. The power of exciting the organs of the brain through mesmeric influence.

Phrensy (fren/'zi), n. [Fr. phrénésie, frénésie; L. phrenesis, from Gr. phrēn, phrenos, the mind.] An old spelling of frenzy. 'Demoniac phrensy, moping melancholy.' Milton.

Phrensy (fren/'zi), v.t. pret. & pp. phrensied; ppr. phrensying. To make frantic; to infuriate. Byron.

Phrentic (fren/'tik), n. A phrenetic. 'Phrentics or bedlams.' Woodward.

Phrentic (fren/'tik), a. Phrenetic. B. Jenks.

Phrontistery (fren-'tis-tēr-i), n. [Gr. phrontistērion, from phrontizō, to think, from phrēn, mind.] A school or seminary of learning.

Phryganea (fri-gā-'nē-a), n. [Gr. phrygannon, a dry stick (from appearance of larva).] A genus of insects of the order Neuroptera, of which there are many species. See CAD-DICE-FLY.

Phrygian (frij'i-an), a. [From Phrygia, in Asia Minor.] Pertaining to Phrygia or to the Phrygians.—Phrygian cap, the red cap of Liberty worn by the leaders during the first French republic.—Phrygian mode, in anc. music, one of the ancient ecclesiastical modes or scales. The Phrygian scale commences on E, and differs from the modern E minor in having for its second degree F flat instead of F sharp.—Phrygian stone, a stone described by the ancients, used in dyeing; a light spongy stone resembling a pumice, said to have drying and astringent properties.

Phrygian (frij'i-an), n. 1. A native or inhabitant of Phrygia.—2. Eccles. one of an early Christian sect, so called from Phrygia, where they abounded. They regarded Montanus as their prophet, and laid claim to the spirit of prophecy.

Phthiriasis (thi-ri-'a-sis), n. [Gr. phthieriasis, from phtheir, a louse.] The lousy disease (morbus pediculosis), which consists in the excessive multiplication of lice on the human body in spite of cleanliness.

Phthiric (tiz/'ik), n. 1. A consumption or wasting away; phthisis.—2. A person affected with phthisis.

Phthirical (tiz/'ik-al), a. [Gr. phthirikos. See PHTHIRIS.] Of or belonging to phthisis; affected by phthisis; wasting the flesh; as, a phthirical consumption.

Phthisicky (tiz/'ik-i), a. Phthirical (which see).

Phthisiology (tiz-i-o-'o-jī), n. [Gr. phthisis, a wasting, and logos, a discourse.] A treatise on phthisis. Dunglison.

Phthisipneumonia (thi-zip-nū-mō-'ni-a), n. [Gr. phthisis, consumption, and pneumones, the lungs.] In med. pulmonary consumption.

Phthisis (thi-'sis), n. [Gr. phthisis, a wasting, from phthiō, to consume.] A disease produced by tubercles in the lungs, and commonly known by the name of consumption; pulmonary consumption.

Phthongometer (fthong-gom-'et-ēr), n. [Gr. phthongos, the voice, a sound, and metron, a measure.] An instrument used for measuring vocal sounds. 'We may, however, consider this instrument as a phthongometer, or measure of vowel quantity.' Whevell.

Phylogogy (fi-kol'o-jī), n. [Gr. phykos, a texts from the Old Testament, and inclosed within a small leather case, which was fastened with straps on the forehead just above and between the eyes, and on the left arm near the region of the heart. The four passages inscribed upon the phylactery were Ex. xiii. 1-10, 11-16; Deut. vi. 4-9; xi. 18-21. The custom was founded on a literal interpretation of Ex. xiii. 16; Deut. vi. 8; xi. 18.—3. Among the primitive Christians, a case in which they inclosed the relics of the dead.

Phylactery, from an original one.

Phylactolēmata (fi-lak'tō-lē-'ma-ta), n. pl. [Gr. phylassō, to guard, and laima, laimatos, the throat.] The division of Polyzoa in which the mouth is provided with the arched valvular process known as the 'epistome,' and in which the tentaculate disc is horse-shoe shaped.

Phylarch (fi-lark), n. [Gr. phylē, a tribe, and archē, rule.] In ancient Athens, the chief or governor of a tribe or phylē, who was specially charged with the command and superintendence of the cavalry.

Phylarchy (fi-lar-'ki), n. The state or office of a phylarch; government of a tribe or clan.

Phyle (fi-lē), n. [Gr. phylē, a tribe.] One of the tribes into which the ancient Athenians were divided, originally four, afterwards ten.

Phyletic (fi-lē-'tik), a. [Gr. phylē, a race.] Relating or pertaining to a race or tribe; applied especially in connection with the development of animal tribes.

Phyllanthus (fi-lan-'thus), n. [From Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and anthos, a flower; flowers produced from the edges of the leaves.] A large genus of plants, nat. order Euphorbiaceae. The species are all natives of warm climates, and vary in stature from small prostrate annuals to moderate-sized trees. Some of them possess medical properties, but few are of any special interest.

Phyllary (fi-lar-i), n. In bot. one of the leaflets forming the involucre of composite flowers. Stormonth.

Phyllis (fi-lis), v.t. [From Phyllis, a name common in amatory poems.] To celebrate or flatter in amatory verses. [Rare.]

He passed his easy hours, instead of prayer, In madrigals and phyllisizing the fair. Garth.

Phyllite (fi-lit), n. [Gr. phylon, a leaf, and lithos, a stone.] 1. In geol. a term used for a fossil leaf in which the principal veins converge at both the base and the apex.—2. In mineral. a mineral found in Sterling, Massachusetts, consisting chiefly of the hydrous silicate of alumina, iron, and manganese, and occurring in thin scales or leaves.

Phyllium (fi-lī-um), n. [Gr. phylon, a leaf.] A genus of orthopterous insects belonging to the family Phasmeidae, and popularly known by the name of leaf-insects or walking-leaves. Some of them have wing-covers so closely resembling the leaves of plants that they are easily mistaken for the vegetable productions around them. The eggs too have a curious resemblance to the seeds of plants.

Phyllium siccifolium.

PHRENOLOGICAL CHART OF THE HUMAN HEAD.

AFFECTIVE FACULTIES. I. Propensities. 1. Amativeness. 2. Philoprogenitiveness. 3. Concentrativeness. 4. Adhesiveness. 5. Combativeness. 6. Destructiveness. 7. Secretiveness. 8. Acquisitiveness. 9. Constructiveness. II. Sentiments. 10. Self-esteem. 11. Love of approbation. 12. Cautiousness. 13. Benevolence. 14. Veneration. 15. Firmness. 16. Conscientiousness. 17. Hope. 18. Wonder. 19. Time. 32. Tune. 33. Language. II. Reflective. 34. Comparison. 35. Causality.

sea-weed, and logos, a discourse.] That department of botany which treats of the algae or sea-weeds.

Phycomater (fi-kō-mā-tēr), n. [Gr. phykos, sea-weed, and matēr, mother.] The gelatine in which the sporules of algaceous plants first vegetate.

Phylacter (fi-lak'tēr), n. A phylactery.

The Pharisees were . . . skilful expositors of the Mosaic law, weaving the precepts thereof in phylacters (narrow scrolls of parchment) bound about their brows and above their left elbows. Sandys.

Phylactered (fi-lak'tēr-d), a. Wearing a phylactery; dressed like the Pharisees.

Phylacteric, Phylacterical (fi-lak'tēr-ik, fi-lak'tēr-ik-al), a. Pertaining to phylacteries.

Phylactery (fi-lak'tēr-i), n. [Gr. phylaktērion, from phylassō, to defend or guard.] 1. Any charm, spell, or amulet worn as a preservative from danger or disease.—2. In Jewish antiqu. a strip of parchment inscribed with certain

They are for the most part natives of the East Indies, Australia, and South America. The males have long antennae and wings, and can fly; the females have short antennae, and are incapable of flight. The cut shows the female of P. siccofolium (two-thirds the natural size).

Phyllocyanin (fil-ô-si'-a-nin), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and kyanos, blue.] The blue colouring principle of chlorophyll.

Phyllocyst (fil-lô-sist), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and kystis, a cyst.] A name given to the cavities in the interior of the hydrophyllia of certain of the oceanic Hydrozoa.

Phyllode (fil-ôd'), n. Same as Phylloodium.

Phylloineous (fil-lô-din'-e-us), a. In bot. having flattened leaf-like twigs or leaf-stalks instead of true leaves.

Phylloium (fil-lô-di-um), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and eidos, likeness.] In bot. a leaf-stalk when it becomes developed into a flattened expansion like a leaf, as in some Australian acacias, and in some species of Oxalis, Bupleurum, &c.

Phyllogen (fil-lô-gen), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and gênai, to produce.] The same as Phyllophore.

Phyllograpus (fil-ô-grap'-us), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and graphô, I write.] Same as Graptopera (which see).

Phylloid (fil-ôid), a. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and eidos, form.] Leaf-like; shaped like a leaf.

Phylomania (fil-lô-ma'-ni-a), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and mania, madness.] In bot. the production of leaves in unusual numbers or in unusual places.

Phyllophagan (fil-ôl'-a-gan), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and phagô, to eat.] One of a section (Phyllophaga) of lamellicorn coleopterous insects containing the chafer, and so called from these insects feeding on the leaves of trees.

Phyllophagous (fil-ôl'-a-gus), a. [See above.] Leaf-eating.

Phyllophore (fil-lô-fôr), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and phoros, bearing, from pherô, to bear.] In bot. the terminal bud or growing point in palms.

Phyllophorous (fil-ôl'-o-rus), a. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and phorô, to bear.] Leaf-bearing; producing leaves.

Phyllopod (fil-lô-pod), n. One of the Phyllopoda.

Phyllopoda (fil-ôp'-o-da), n. pl. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and pous, podos, a foot.] An order of branchiopodous crustaceans, in which the body is elongated, and the extremities of a flattened form, like that of a leaf, for the purpose of swimming, as in the Branchipus. They are chiefly interesting from their affinity to the extinct trilobites, and are by some united with the Ostracoda.

Phylloptosis (fil-ôp'-to-sis), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and ptôsis, a falling.] In bot. the fall of the leaf.

Phyllosomata (fil-ô-sô-ma'-ta), n. pl. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and sôma, a body.] A name given to what was formerly regarded as a distinct family of double-cuirassed crustaceans, belonging to the order Stomatopoda, composed of forms which are very remarkable for their rounded shape and the transparency of their teguments. They, or at least some of them, are now known to be larval forms of macrurous decapods. See GLASS-CRAB.

Phyllostoma (fil-ôs'-to-ma), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and stoma, a mouth.] A genus of bats belonging to the family Phyllostomidae.

Phyllostome (fil-ô-stôm), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and stoma, a mouth.] A leaf-nosed bat, a member of the family Phyllostomidae (which see).

Phyllostomidae (fil-ô-stom'-i-dê), n. pl. The spectre-bats, a family of insectivorous Chiroptera, which have a simple and fleshy leaflike appendage to the nose (whence the name), and a fore-finger of two joints.

They attain to a considerable size, Phyllostoma spectrum having an expanse of wing of 2½ feet. The family comprises the vampires or blood-sucking bats. See VAMPIRE-BAT.

Phyllotactic (fil-o-tak'tik), a. Pertaining to phyllotaxis.

Phyllotaxis, Phyllotaxy (fil'-o-tak-sis, fil'-o-tak-si), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and taxis, order.] In bot. the arrangement of the leaves on the axis or stem.

Phylloxanthin (fil-lok-san'thin), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and xanthos, yellow.] The yellow colouring principle of chlorophyll.

Phylloxera (fil-ok-sê-ra), n. [Gr. phyllon, a leaf, and xêros, parched.] A genus of insects which infests the leaves and roots of the oak, vine, &c., forming leaf-galls. There are a good many species, but the one best known is the P. vastatrix, introduced into Europe from N. America, and causing much damage in some wine-producing countries.

Phyllula (fil-lû-la), n. In bot. the scar left on a branch by the fall of a leaf.

Phylogensis (fi-lô-jen'-e-sis), n. [Gr. phylê, a class or tribe, and genesis.] The history of the genealogical development of an organized being; the race history of an animal or vegetable type, as distinguished from ontogenesis, the history of individual development, and from biogenesis, or life-development generally. See extract under ONTOGENESIS.

Phylogenetic (fi'lô-jê-net'ik), a. Pertaining to phylogensis or phylogeny, or the race history of an animal. 'The probable phylogenetic origin of the nervous system.' Nineteenth Century.

Phylogenetically (fi'lô-jê-net'ik-al-i), adv. See extract under ONTOGENETICALLY.

Phylogeny (fi-lô-jê-ni), n. [Gr. phylê, a tribe, and gennao, to produce.] In biol. the origin and genealogy of races or types of animal forms.

We believe that more solid progress will be made by carefully working out the application of natural selection to restricted and well-known animal groups than by attempting the construction of more comprehensive and imposing phylogenies. Nature.

Phyma (fi-ma), n. [Gr. phyma, from phyo, to produce.] An imperfectly suppurating tumour, forming an abscess; a tubercle on any external part of the body.

Physa (fi-sa), n. [Gr. physa, a bladder.] A genus of fresh-water molluscs belonging to the family Lymnæide, frequently found on the under surface of the leaves of aquatic plants.

Physalia (fi-sâ-li-a), n. [Gr. physalis, a bubble or bladder.] A genus of Hydrozoa, of the sub-class Siphonophora and order Physophoridae, remarkable for its size, the brilliancy of its hues, and the severe burning pain produced by its contact. The P. atlantica or pelagica is known by the name of the Portuguese man-of-war. These hydrozoa are characterized by the presence of one or more large air-sacs, by which great buoyancy is given to them, so that they float on the surface of the tropical ocean. Numerous tentacula depend from the under side, one class short and the other long. The shorter are the nutritive individuals of the colony, the longer, which in a Physalia 5 or 6 inches long are capable of being extended to 12 or 18 feet, possess a remarkable stinging power, and are probably used to stun their prey.

Physalis (fi'sal-is), n. [Gr. physalis, a bladder—from the inflated calyx.] A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Solanaceæ. They are annual or perennial herbs, with entire (or rarely pinnatifid) leaves, small axillary flowers, and globose berries, which are included in an inflated calyx. The fruit of P. Alkekengi, or winter cherry, is diuretic, and is used by veterinary surgeons. It is often grown in gardens for its ornamental fruit. The fruit of P. pubescens (the 'Cape gooseberry') forms a delicious preserve.

Physalite (fi'sa-lit), n. [Gr. physaô, to swell or inflate, and lithos, a stone.] A mineral of a greenish-white colour, a sub-species of prismatic topaz: called also Pyrophyphalite, as it intumesces in heat.

Physconia (fis-kô-ni-a), n. [Gr. physkôn, a big-bellied person.] In med. an enlargement of the abdomen, unconnected with dropsy, such as a morbid state of the liver or of the spleen.

Physeter (fi-sê-têr), n. [Gr. physêtêr, a pair of bellows.] 1. The spermaceti whale. See CACHALOT.—2. A filtering machine or apparatus worked by atmospheric pressure.

Physianthropy (fiz-i-an'thro-pi), n. [Gr. physis, nature, and anthrôpos, man.] The philosophy of human life, or the doctrine of the constitution and diseases of man, and the remedies. [Rare.]

Physic (fiz'ik), n. [Gr. physikos, pertaining to nature, natural, from physis, nature, from phyo, to bring forth, to spring up or forth, to come into being; cog. with Skr. bhû (L. fu), to be, to exist; E. to be.] 1. The philosophy or knowledge of medicine; the art of healing diseases; the medical art or profession; medicine.

Were it my business to understand physic, would not the safer way be to consult nature herself in the history of diseases and their cures. Locke.

2. A medicine or medicines; remedy for disease.

He 'scapes the best, who nature to repair
Draws physic from the fields in draughts of air. Dryden.

3. In popular language, a medicine that purges; a purge; a cathartic.

The people used physic to purge themselves of humours. Abp. Abbot.

—Physic garden, an old name for a botanic garden.

Physic (fiz'ik), v. t. pret. & pp. physicked; ppr. physicking. 1. To treat with physic; to purge.—2. To treat with remedies; to cure.

The labour we delight in physics pain. Shak.

Physical (fiz'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to nature; relating to what is material and perceived by the senses; pertaining to the material part or structure of an organized being, as opposed to what is mental, moral, or imaginary; in accordance with the laws of nature; material.

If the government were subverted by physical force, all the movable wealth would be exposed to imminent risk of spoliation and destruction. Macaulay.

Labour, then, in the physical world is always and solely employed in putting objects in motion; the properties of matter, the laws of nature do the rest. J. S. Mill.

2. Pertaining to physics or natural philosophy; as, physical science; physical law, &c. 3. External; obvious to the senses; cognizable through a bodily or material organization; as, the physical characters of a mineral: opposed to chemical.—4.† Relating to the art of healing.—5.† Having the property of evacuating the bowels; purgative.—6.† Medicinal; promoting the cure of diseases.

Is Brutus sick? and is it physical
To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dark morning? Shak.

—Physical astronomy, physical education, physical geography, physical optics, physical point, physical sciences. See the nouns.

Physicist (fiz'ik-al-ist), n. One who maintains that man's intellectual and moral nature depends on and results from his physical constitution; one who holds that human thought and action are determined by physical organization.

Physically (fiz'ik-al-i), adv. 1. In a physical manner; according to nature; according to physics or natural philosophy; not intellectually or morally.

I am not now treating physically of light or colours. Locke.

2.† According to the art or rules of medicine.

He that lives physically, must live miserably. Cheyne.

Physicalness (fiz'ik-al-nes), n. The state of being physical. Worcester.

Physician (fi-zî-shan), n. (See PHYSIC.) 1. A person skilled in the art of healing; one whose profession is to prescribe remedies for diseases; one holding a license to practise physic from any competent authority, such as the Royal College of Physicians in London. The duty of the physician, in the narrow sense, is to prescribe remedies, while the surgeon performs operations, but surgery may also be included in the profession of physician.

a, Phylloium (Acacia heterophylla).

Physalia atlantica (Portuguese man-of-war).

Head of Vampire-bat (Phyllostoma spectrum).

The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds.
Shak.

2. One that heals moral diseases; as, a physician of the soul. See PHYSIC.

Physicianed (fî-zî-shand), a. Educated or licensed as a physician. 'One Dr. Lucas, a physicianed apothecary.' H. Walpole.

Physicism (fî-zî-sizm), n. The practice of ascribing everything to merely physical or material causes, to the exclusion of spirit.

Physicist (fî-zî-sist), n. One skilled in physics; a natural philosopher.

The physicist studies the effect of the various forms of natural force, such as heat, light, and electricity, upon matter in its different states of solid, liquid, and gas; he investigates the laws which determine the motion and equilibrium of bodies, besides much more which cannot here be enlarged upon. Madan.

Physic-nut (fî-zîk-nut), n. See CURCAS.

Physico-logic (fî-zîk-ô-loj'ik), n. Logic illustrated by physics.

Physico-logical (fî-zîk-ô-loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to physico-logic. Swift. [Rare.]

Physico-mathematics (fî-zîk-ô-mat'hê-mat'iks), n. Mixed mathematics. See under MATHEMATICS.

Physico-philosophy (fî-zî-kô-fî-los'ô-fî), n. The philosophy of nature.

Physico-theology (fî-zîk-ô-thê-ô'ô-jî), n. Theology or divinity illustrated or enforced by physics or natural philosophy.

Physics (fî-zîks), n. [Gr. phýsika, physical or natural things. See PHYSIC.] In the widest sense, that branch of science which treats of the laws and properties of matter; the science of nature; but the term is now universally used in a narrower sense, and as equivalent to natural philosophy it means that branch of science which treats of the general properties of bodies as bodies, and of the phenomena produced by the action of the various forces on matter in the mass. It is sometimes defined as the science of energy, dealing with matter and its properties especially in so far as they are intimately associated with the transformations of energy. Physics, therefore, includes dynamics, and the branches of science that deal with light, heat, electricity, and magnetism.

Physiognomer (fî-zî-og'no-mér), n. Same as Physiognomist. Peacham.

Physiognomic, Physiognomical (fî-zî-og'no-m'ik, fî-zî-og'no-m'ik-al), a. [See PHYSIOGNOMY.] Pertaining to physiognomy.

In long observation of men he may acquire a physiognomical intuitive knowledge; judge the interiors by the outside. Sir T. Browne.

Physiognomics (fî-zî-og'no-m'iks), n. Same as Physiognomy, 1.

Physiognomist (fî-zî-og'no-m'ist), n. One skilled in physiognomy: (a) one able to judge of the particular temper or other qualities of the mind by signs in the countenance. (b) One who tells fortunes by somnancy of the face. 'A certain physiognomist or teller of fortune by looking only upon the face of men and women.' Holland.

Physiognomize (fî-zî-og'no-m'iz), v. t. To observe the physiognomy of; to practise physiognomy upon. Southey. [Rare.]

Physiognomonic (fî-zî-og'no-mon'ik), a. Same as Physiognomic.

Physiognomy (fî-zî-og'no-mi), n. [Properly physiognomony, from Gr. physiognómia—phýsis, nature, and gnómōn, one who knows, from stem of gignōskō, gínōskō, to know.] 1. The art of discerning the character of the mind from the features of the face, or the art of discovering the predominant temper or other characteristic qualities of the mind by the form of the body. — 2. The face or countenance, with respect to the temper of the mind; particular configuration, cast, or expression of countenance.

The end of portraits consists of expressing the true temper of those persons which it represents, and to make known their physiognomy. Dryden.

3. The art of telling fortunes by inspection of the features. — 4. In bot. the general appearance of a plant without reference to botanical characters. Balfour.

Physiognotype (fî-zî-og'no-tip), n. An instrument for taking an exact imprint or cast of the countenance.

Physiognony (fî-zî-og'ô-ni), n. [Gr. phýsis, nature, and gonē, generation.] The production or generation of nature. Coleridge.

Physiographical (fî-zî-ô-graf'ik-al), a. Pertaining to physiography.

Physiography (fî-zî-ô-gra-fî), n. [Gr. phýsis, nature, and graphō, to describe.] The science which treats of the earth's physical features, and the causes by which they have been modified, as well as of the climates, life, &c., of the globe; physical geography. See extract.

It is very desirable that those who live on the earth should know something of its nature, origin, and history, and also of its relation to the other bodies of the universe. This kind of research it has been proposed to call physiography, and it must be understood to include physical geography, some departments of general physics, geology, chemistry, biology, and some investigations with regard to the nature and composition of the sun, the stars, the nebulae, and other celestial phenomena. Ansted.

Physiologer (fî-zî-ô-loj'ér), n. A physiologist.

Physiologic, Physiological (fî-zî-ô-loj'ik, fî-zî-ô-loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to physiology; relating to the science that deals with the structure and functions of animals and plants.

Physiologically (fî-zî-ô-loj'ik-al-li), adv. According to the principles of physiology.

Physiologist (fî-zî-ô-loj'ist), n. One who is versed in or who treats of physiology.

Physiology (fî-zî-ô-loj-i), n. [Fr. physiologie, Gr. physiología—phýsis, nature, and logos, discourse.] That science which has for its aim the study and elucidation of the actions and processes incidental to and characteristic of the living state, whether in animals or plants. The subject thus comprises two grand divisions, namely, animal and vegetable physiology; when more specially applied to the investigation of the functions in man the appellation human physiology is applied to the science.

Physiology is the science which treats of the functions of the living organism, ascertains their co-ordinations and their correlations in the general chain of causes and effects, and traces out their dependence upon the physical states of the organs by which these functions are exercised. Huxley.

Physique (fî-zêk'), n. [Fr.] The physical structure or organization of an individual.

Physiomy (fî-zî-ô-mi), n. Physiognomy.

Faith, sir, he has an English name, but his physiomy is more hotter in France than here. Shak.

Physocalymma (fî-zî-ka-lim'a), n. [Gr. phýsa, a bladder, and kalymma, a covering, from kalyptō, to cover.] A genus of Brazilian trees consisting of one species, of the nat. order Lythraceae. It yields the beautiful striped, rose-coloured wood called tulip-wood by our carpenters, used for inlaying costly pieces of furniture.

Physolobium (fî-zî-ô-blî-um), n. [Gr. phýsa, a bladder, and lobos, a pod.] A genus of leguminous plants, natives of South-west Australia, having a trailing or twining habit, scarlet flowers, usually two or three only on one peduncle, and a rigid pod. Called also Bladder-pod.

Physomycetes (fî-zî-mî-sê'têz), n. pl. [Gr. phýsa, a bladder, and mykēs, myketos, a mushroom.] A small section of Fungi, characterized by the total absence of a hymenium, and by the vesicular fruit inclosing an indefinite number or mass of sporidia. Called also Vesiculiferi.

Physophoridae (fî-zî-ô-fî-dê), n. pl. [Gr. phýsa, a bladder, and phoreō, to carry.] That division of the oceanic Hydrozoa which comprises those Siphonophora in which the hydrosoma consists of several polypites united by a flexible, contractile, unbranched, or very slightly branched, cœnosarc, the proximal end of which is dilated into a contractile float or air-sac. Its most remarkable species is Physalia atlantica (the Portuguese man-of-war). See PHYSALIA.

Physospermum (fî-zî-spér'mum), n. [From Gr. phýsa, a bladder, and sperma, a seed; the teguments do not adhere to the seed in a young state.] A genus of plants, nat. order Umbelliferae, containing two or three species natives of Europe and West Asia. They are erect herbs, with compound leaves, small white flowers, and bladdery fruit, whence the name. P. cornubiense (Cornish lovage) is a British plant, growing in bushy fields in Cornwall.

Physostigma (fî-zî-stig'ma), n. [Gr. phýsa, a bladder, and stigma, a spot, a mark.] A genus of leguminous plants, natives of Old Calabar, belonging to the sub-order Papilionaceae, and tribe Phaseoleae, or kidney-bean tribe. P. venenosum, a half-shrubby twining plant, yields the well-known Calabar bean or ordeal-nut. See CALABAR BEAN.

Physostigmine (fî-zî-stig'min), n. An alkaloid constituting the active principle of the Calabar bean. It is highly poisonous, and when separated by the usual process presents the appearance of a brownish-yellow amorphous mass.

Physostomata, Physostomi (fî-zî-stom'a-ta, fî-zîs-to-mi), n. pl. [Gr. phýsa, a bladder, and stoma, a mouth.] Müller's synonym for the malacocephalus fishes with the ventral fins abdominal or wanting, and the swim-bladder when present provided with a duct.

Physo (fî-zî), n. A fusee. Locke.

Phytelephas (fî-tel'ê-fas), n. [From Gr. phýton, a plant, and elephas, ivory.] A genus of plants inhabiting tropical America, the type of the small nat. order Phytelephasiae. P. macrocarpa (the ivory plant of South America) resembles the palms in its fronds, which equal those of the cocoa-nut in dimensions, and also in the remarkable structure and weight of its fruit. See IVORY-NUT.

Phyteuma (fî-tû'ma), n. [Gr. a plant, also a particular kind of plant.] A genus of herbaceous plants, nat. order Campanulaceae, abounding in a milky juice. They are perennials, with stalked tufted leaves and yellowish-white or blue flowers in dense spikes or heads. The two British species, P. orbiculare and spicatum, are known by the name of rampion. The roots and young shoots of the latter are an ancient article of food.

Phytivorous (fî-tiv'ô-rus), a. [Gr. phýton, a plant, and L. voro, to eat.] Feeding on plants or herbage; herbivorous; as, phytivorous animals.

Hairy animals with only two large foreteeth, are all phytivorous, and called the hare kind. Ray.

Phyto-chemical (fî-tô-kem'ik-al), a. Pertaining or relating to phyto-chemistry.

Phyto-chemistry (fî-tô-kem'ist-ri), n. Vegetable chemistry.

Phytochimy (fî-tok'î-mi), n. Phyto-chemistry.

Phytocrene (fî-tô-krên), n. [Gr. phýton, a plant, and krênē, a well.] A genus of plants. See WATER-VINE.

Phytogenesis, Phytogeny (fî-tô-jen'e-sis, fî-tôj'e-ni), n. The doctrine of the generation of plants.

Phytogeography (fî-tô-jê-og'ra-fî), n. [Gr. phýton, a plant, and E. geography.] The geography or geographical distribution of plants.

Phytoglyphic (fî-tô-glîf'ik), a. Relating to phytoglyphy.

Phytoglyphy (fî-tog'li-fî), n. [Gr. phýton, a plant, and glyphō, to engrave.] The art of printing from nature, by taking impressions from plants on soft metal, from which copies can be taken. Called also Nature-printing.

Phytographical (fî-tô-graf'ik-al), a. Pertaining to the description of plants.

Phytography (fî-tô-gra-fî), n. [Gr. phýton, a plant, and graphē, description.] A description of plants, or that branch of botany which concerns itself with the rules to be observed in describing and naming plants.

Phytoid (fî'toid), a. [Gr. phýton, a plant, and eîdos, likeness.] Plant-like; specifically, in zool. applied to animals or organs having a plant-like appearance.

Phytolacca (fî-tô-lak'ka), n. [From Gr. phýton, a plant, and lacca, a Latinized form of lac—in allusion to the crimson colour of the fruit.] A genus of tropical or subtropical herbaceous plants, type of the nat. order Phytolacaceae, with erect or occasionally twining stems, a thickish turnip-shaped root, alternate undivided broad leaves, and leafless erect racemes of flowers, succeeded by deep purple fruit. P. decandra, a North American species, is a branching herbaceous plant which is naturalized in some parts of Europe and Asia. Its root acts as a powerful emetic and cathartic, but its use is attended with narcotic effects. Its berries are said to possess the same quality; they are employed as a remedy for chronic and syphilitic rheumatism, and for allaying syphilitic pains. The leaves are extremely acrid, but the young shoots, which lose this quality by boiling in water, are eaten in the United States as asparagus. It is known as pokeweed and pigeon-berry.

Phytolite (fî-tô-lî-ti), n. [Gr. phýton, a plant, and lithos, a stone.] An old name for a fossil plant.

Phytolithologist (fî-tô-lî-thol'ô-jist), n. One who is skilled in or who writes upon fossil plants.

Phytolithology (fî-tô-lî-thol'ô-jî), n. [Gr. phýton, a plant, lithos, a stone, and logos, discourse.] That part of science which treats of fossil plants.

Phytology (fî-tô-loj'ik-al), a. [See PHYTOLOGY.] Relating to phytology or to plants; botanical.

Fâte, fâr, fat, fâll;

mê, met, hêr;

pine, pin;

nôte, not, môve;

tûbe, tub, bûll;

oil, pound;

û, Sc. abume;

y, Sc. ley.

Phytologist (fi-to'lo-jist), n. [See PHYTOLOGY.] One versed in plants or skilled in phytology; a botanist. Evelyn.

Phytology (fi-to'lo-jī), n. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and logos, discourse.] The science of plants, a name sometimes used as equivalent to botany.

Phyton (fi'ton), n. [Gr., a plant.] In bot. a rudimentary or embryo plant; a simple individual plant as represented by a leaf, the tree being regarded as a compound made up of many phytos.

Phytotomy (fi-ton'o-mi), n. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and nomos, a law.] The science of the origin and growth of plants.

Phytopathologist (fi'to-pa-thol'o-jist), n. One skilled in phytopathology or diseases of plants.

Phytopathology (fi'to-pa-thol'o-jī), n. [Gr. phyton, a plant, pathos, disease, and logos, treatise.] Scientific knowledge relating to the diseases of plants; an account of the diseases to which plants are liable.

Phytophagous (fi-tof-a-gus), a. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and phago, to eat.] Eating or subsisting on plants.

Phytosaurus (fi-to-sa'rus), n. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and saurus, a lizard.] Same as Hyleosaurus.

Phytotomist (fi-to'to-mist), n. One versed in phytotomy or vegetable anatomy.

Phytotomy (fi-to'to-mi), n. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and tomē, a cutting, from temnō, to cut.] Vegetable anatomy.

Phytozoa (fi-to-zō'a), n. pl. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and zōon, an animal.] 1. A name synonymous with Zoophytes, and sometimes like it loosely applied to many plant-like animals, such as sponges, corals, sea-anemones, sea-mats, &c.—2. A term sometimes given to certain marine animalcules living in the tissues of plants.

Phytozoaria (fi'to-zō-a'ri-a), n. [Gr. phyton, a plant, and zōon, an animal.] A term sometimes applied to those minute aquatic animals more commonly termed Infusoria and Microzoa.

Phytozoon (fi-to-zō'on), n. [See PHYTOZOA.] One of the phytozoa; a zoophyte.

Piaba (pi-a'ba), n. A small fresh-water fish of Brazil, about the size of the minnow, much esteemed for food.

Piagaba (pi-as'a-bā), n. [Pg.] Same as Pi-assava.

Piaclet (pi'a-kl), n. [L. piaculum. See PIACULAR.] A sin or crime.

But may I without piacle forget, in the very last scene of one of his latest actions amongst us, what he then did. Bp. King.

Piacular (pi-ak'ū-lēr), a. [L. piacularis, from piaculum, a sin-offering or expiation, a sin or crime, from pio, to expiate, from pius, pious.] 1. Expiatory; having power to atone.—2. Requiring expiation; criminal; atrociously bad. 'To cleanse his little Warwickshire fold from its piacular pollutions.' De Quincey. [Rare.]

Piacularity (pi-ak'ū-lar'i-ti), n. The state or quality of being piacular; criminality; badness. De Quincey.

Piaculous (pi-ak'ū-lus), a. Same as Piacular. Sir T. Browne.

Pia Mater (pi'a mā'tēr), n. [L., lit. pious mother.] In anat. a vascular membrane, investing the whole surface of the brain, dipping into its convolutions, and forming a fold in its interior called velum interpositum.

Pianett (pi-a-net), n. [L. picus, a woodpecker, pica, a magpie.] 1. A bird, the lesser woodpecker.—2. The magpie.

Pianette (pi-a-net'), n. [Fr. dim. of piano.] Same as Pianino.

Pianino (pi-ā-nē'nō), n. [It. dim. of piano.] A small pianoforte.

Pianissimo (pi-ā-nis'i-mō), [It. superl. of piano, soft. See PIANOFORTE.] In music, very soft; a direction to execute a passage in the softest manner. Usually abbreviated pp or ppp.

Pianist (pi-an'ist), n. A performer on the pianoforte.

Piano (pi-an'ō), a. [It., soft, smooth. See PIANOFORTE.] In music, soft; a direction to a performer to execute a passage softly or with diminished volume of tone. Usually abbreviated p.

Piano (pi-an'ō), n. A pianoforte.

Pianoforte (pi-an'ō-for-tā), n. [It. piano (L. planus), soft, lit. plane, smooth, and forte (L. fortis), strong.] A musical metal-stringed instrument of the keyed species. The name was given to it to distinguish it from its immediate predecessors, the harpsichord and the spinet, in which no force of touch could lessen or strengthen the intensity of the sound produced, from the quills always striking the strings with nearly a like force; whereas in the pianoforte gradations of tone can be produced, the strings being put in vibration by means of small hammers connected by levers with the key or finger board, which hammers quit the strings directly they are struck, a damper falling down on the string the moment the finger is lifted from the key. Formerly the strings were all of thin wire; now the bass strings are thick and covered with a thin coil of copper wire; and the thickness, length, and tension of the strings all diminish from the lower to the upper notes. The grand pianoforte, which is somewhat triangular in shape, and has the wires running horizontally and parallel to the keys, has three strings to each of the upper and middle notes, generally two to the lower notes, and one to the lowest octave. Other pianos have a similar number of strings to the notes, but in the square piano they are parallel to the key-board, while in the upright piano the strings run vertically from top to bottom of the instrument. From its great strength of tone the grand piano is the instrument best adapted for the concert room; the square is rapidly disappearing, its place being now taken by the various forms of the upright. The invention of the pianoforte is now usually ascribed to Bartolomeo Cristofori of Padua, and dates from about 1714, though claims have been made in favour of Schröter, a German organist, and Marius, a French harpsichord maker. The compass of the instrument, originally from four to five octaves, has now been extended to seven or even more.

Pianograph (pi-an'ō-graf), n. A form of music recorder. See MUSIC-RECORDER.

Piarist (pi-ar'ist), n. [L. pius, pious.] One of a religious order who, in addition to the three usual monastic vows, took also a fourth, namely, to devote themselves to the gratuitous instruction of youth. The order was instituted at Rome by Joseph Casalanza in the beginning of the seventeenth century. Like the Jesuits, the Piarists are a secular order subject to rules. They soon spread through several Catholic countries, particularly the Austrian dominions. Many gymnasia and schools in Hungary and Poland are still under their direction, and in Bohemia, Silesia, and Austria they have some respectable colleges.

Piassava (pi-as'a-vā), n. [Pg. piacaba.] The name under which a fibrous produce of the palm-tree Attalea funifera is imported from Brazil into this country. The fibres are derived from the dilated base of the leaf-stalks, and are extensively employed in the manufacture of brooms and brushes for street-sweeping. The fruit of this tree, which belongs to the cocca-nut group, is imported under the name of coquilla-nuts.

Piassava Palm (Attalea funifera).

1, Base of leaf-stalks enlarged. 2, Coquilla-nut.

Plaster, Piastre (pi-as'tēr), n. [Fr. piastre, It. and Sp. piastro, a thin plate of metal, a dollar, from L.L. piastro, L. emplastum, Gr. emplastron, a plaster, from emplastō, to plaster up or over.] A denomination of money of various values. The old Italian piastre was equivalent to about 3s. 7d. sterling; the Spanish piastre was worth about 4s.; while the Turkish piastre means a coin of scarcely $\frac{1}{16}$ th the value of the foregoing, namely, the equivalent of a little over 2d. sterling. One hundred piastres of Turkey are worth, on an average of the exchanges, about 18s. sterling.

Piation (pi-ā'shon), n. [L. piatio, the act of making expiation.] The act of making atonement; expiation.

Piazza (pi-a'za), n. [It. piazza, open place, square, market-place. See PLACE.] A square open space surrounded by buildings or colonnades. The term is frequently, but improperly, used to signify an arcaded or colonnaded walk.

We walk by the obelisk, and meditate in piazas, that they that meet us may talk of us. Fer. Taylor.

Pib-corn (pib'korn), n. [W., lit. pipe-horn.] Among the Welsh, a wind-instrument or pipe with a horn at each end.

Pibroch (pē'broch), n. [Gael. piobaireachd, pipe-music, from piobair, a piper, piob, a pipe, bagpipe.] A wild irregular species of music peculiar to the Highlands of Scotland. It is performed on a bagpipe, and adapted to excite or assuage passion, and particularly to rouse a martial spirit among troops going to battle. The pibroch produces by imitative sounds the different phases of a battle—the march, the conflict, the flight, the pursuit, and the lament for the fallen. Byron and others have erroneously applied this term to the bagpipe itself.

Pic (pik), n. A Turkish cloth measure, varying from 18 to 28 inches.

Pica (pi'ka), n. [L. pica, a pie, a magpie. The second meaning arises from the omnivorous habits of the magpie.] 1. A genus of birds of the family Corvidæ (crow family), including the common magpie (P. caudata). The species of this genus differ from the true crows in being of a smaller size and brighter colours, but chiefly in their long and graduated tail. See MAGPIE.—2. In med. a vitiated appetite which makes the patient crave what is unfit for food, as chalk, ashes, coal, &c.—Pica marina, an old name for the oyster-catcher or sea-pie.

Pica (pi'ka), n. [L. pica, piceis, pitch.] 1. A large printing type of two different sizes, small pica and large pica: probably named from littera piceata (pitch-black letter), a great black letter at the beginning of some new order in the liturgy.—2. Eccles. formerly an ordinary, a table or directory for devotional services.—3. An alphabetical catalogue of names and things in rolls and records.

Picador (pik-a-dor), n. [Sp., from pica, a pike or lance.] In bull-fighting, one of the horsemen armed with a lance who commence the combat in the arena by maddening the bull by pricking with their weapons, but without the intention of disabling him.

Picamar (pik'a-mār), n. [L. pica, piceis, pitch, and amarus, bitter.] The bitter principle of tar.

Picaninny (pik'a-nin-i), n. Same as Pickaninny.

Picard (pik'ard), n. Eccles. one of a sect of Vaudois in the fifteenth century attempted to renew the practices of the Adamites, going stark naked and believing in the community of women: so called from Picard, a native of Flanders, the reviver of the heresy.

Picaresque (pik-a-resk'), a. [Fr. See PICARON.] Pertaining to or dealing with rogues or picaroons; applied to literary productions that deal with the fortunes of rogues or adventurers such as Gil Blas.

Picaroon (pik-a-rōn), n. [Sp. picaron, aug. of picaro, a rogue.] 1. A rogue or cheat; one that lives by his wits; an adventurer.—2. A plunderer; especially, a plunderer of wrecks; a pirate; a corsair.

In all wars, Corsica and Majorca have been nests of picaroons. Sir W. Temple.

Some frigates should be always in the Downs to chase picaroons from infesting the coast.

Ld. Clarendon.

Picayune (pik-a-yūn), n. [Said to be of Carib origin.] 1. The name for the Spanish half-real in Florida, Louisiana, &c. It is equal to $\frac{1}{16}$ th of a dollar.—2. In New York, a colloquial or familiar term for a sixpence.

There's a picayune for you to buy candy with Dodo. Mrs. Beecher Stowe.

Piccadil, Piccadilly (pik'a-dil, pik-a-dil'i), n. [O. Fr. picadille, piccadille, probably from the root of pique, peak.] A high collar or a kind of ruff anciently worn, the precise character of which is somewhat uncertain, though it is supposed to be shown in the accompanying cut. It appears to have received this name about the commencement of the reign of James I. The street in London called Piccadilly is supposed to have taken its name from this part of dress.

Piccadil.

Piccage (pik'áj), n. [Norm. pecker, to break open; Fr. piqueur, to pick.] Money paid at fairs for breaking ground for booths.

Piccalilli (pik'a-lil-i), n. An imitation Indian pickle of various vegetables, with pungent spices.

Piccolo (pik'kó-ló), n. [It. piccolo, small.] 1. A small flute, the tones of which range an octave higher than those of the ordinary orchestral flute. Called also an Octave Flute. 2. An organ stop of 2 feet length; the pipes are of wood and have a brilliant piercing tone.—3. A small upright piano, standing about 3½ feet high.

Pice (pis), n. sing. and pl. Small East Indian coin, value about $\frac{1}{4}$ d. each.

Piceous (pi'shus), a. [L. piceus, from pice, piceis, pitch.] Of or belonging to pitch; black as pitch.

Pichurim-bean (pich'ü-rim-bén), n. Same as Pitchurim-bean.

Picidae (pi'si-dé), n. pl. [From L. picus, a woodpecker, one of the genera.] The woodpeckers and wry-necks, a family of scansorial or climbing birds, characterized by their long, straight, angular beak, the end of which is compressed into a wedge adapted to perforate the bark of trees. The tail-feathers terminate in points, and are unusually hard and stiff, assisting the birds to keep steady when searching for insects. They feed chiefly upon insects, and the tongue is extensible, barbed at the point, and covered with a viscid secretion, which enables them to catch their prey by suddenly darting it out.

Pick (pik), v. t. [From A. Sax. pycan, to pick, to pull, pic, a sharp point; probably in part also from Fr. piqueur, to pierce, from pic, something sharp. Pike, peak, pick, and beck are closely allied forms, being all from the Celtic; W. pic, a point, a pike; Gael. pioic, pioicard, a pick, a pickaxe; same root also in spike.] 1. To strike at with anything pointed; to act upon with any pointed instrument; to peck at, as a bird with its bill; to pierce.

Pick an apple with a pin full of holes, not deep, and smear it with spirits, to see if the virtual heat of the strong waters will not mature it. Bacon.

2. To clean by removing by the teeth, fingers, claws, or a small instrument, something that adheres; to remove objectionable matter from; as, to pick a bone; to pick the teeth. 'Pick his teeth and sing.' Shak.—3. To separate from other things; to select from a number or quantity; to choose; as, to pick the best men from a company. 'One man picked out of ten thousand.' Shak.

Deep through the miry lane she picked her way. Gay.

4. To pluck; to gather, as fruit or things growing; as, to pick strawberries. 'May pick a thousand salads.' Shak.—5. To gather up here and there; to collect; to get hold of or possession of; to acquire; often with up; as, to pick up information. 'Pick up some pretty estate.' Shak.—6. To snatch thievishly; to steal the contents of; as, to pick a pocket.

Pistol, did you pick Master Slender's purse? Shak.

—To pick in, in painting, to correct any unevenness in a picture by using a small pencil.—To pick off, (a) to separate by the fingers or a small instrument; to separate by a sharp sudden movement; as, to pick off a leaf. (b) To aim at and kill or wound; as, the riflemen were picking off the enemy.—To pick out, (a) to draw from an interior by anything pointed; as, to pick out one's eyes. Prov. xxx. 17. (b) To select from a number or quantity; as, I could pick him out from among a hundred. (c) To mark out or variegate, as a dark back-ground, with figures or lines of a bright colour. 'Dark houses, with window-panes of stone, or picked out of a lighter red.' Thackeray.—To pick up, (a) to take up with the fingers, or otherwise to snatch; as, the early bird picks up the worm. 'The acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood.' Locke. (b) To obtain by repeated effort; as, to pick up a livelihood. (c) To take particular things here and there; as, to pick up acquaintances by the way.—To pick a bone with one, to scold or quarrel with him.—To pick a hole in one's coat, to find fault with one.—To pick a lock, to open it with some instrument other than the key. Shakspeare has also, to pick a bolt.

*Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
Yet love breaks through and picks them all at last.* Shak.

—To pick oakum, to make oakum by untwisting old ropes.—To pick a quarrel, to quarrel intentionally with a person.—To pick a thank,† to pick thanks,† to perform some servile or mean act for the purpose of gaining favour. 'By slavish fawning or by picking thanks.' Wither.

Pick (pik), v. i. 1. To eat slowly or by morsels; to nibble.

*Why stand'st thou picking? Is thy palate sore,
That beet and radishes will make thee roar?* Dryden.

2. To do anything nicely or by attending to small things.—3. To steal; to pilfer.

Pick (pik), n. [Fr. pie, a pickaxe, a pointed instrument. See the verb.] 1. A heavy sharp-pointed iron tool, with a wooden handle, used for penetrating and loosening hard earth, stones, &c., in the operations of mining, digging, excavating, ditching, &c. 2. Among masons, a sharp hammer used in dressing stones.—3. A tooth-pick. 'He eats with picks.' Beau. & Fl. [Nares and others suggest that forks are meant here.] 4. A pike or spike; the sharp point fixed in the centre of a buckler.

*Take down my buckler,
And sweep the cobwebs off, and grind the pick on't.* Beau. & Fl.

5. In painting, that which is picked in, either by a point or by a pointed pencil.—6. Choice; right of selection.

France and Russia have the pick of our stables. Lord Lytton.

Picus (pi'kus), n. [L., a woodpecker.] The woodpecker, an extensive and well-defined genus of birds, distributed over most parts of the globe, belonging to the family Picidae and the order Scansores or Climbers. They are characterized by their long, straight, angular beak, the end of which is compressed into a wedge, and fitted for splitting the bark of trees; by their slender tongue, armed near the tip with spines that curve backwards; and by their tail, composed of ten quills, with stiff and elastic stems, which acts as a prop in supporting them while climbing. From the structure and position of their toes—two forward and two behind, each armed with a strong hooked claw—they are naturally climbers, and wander over trees in every direction, rapidly tapping the bark with their beaks to discover the place where an insect is lodged, and insinuating their long tongue into its cracks and crevices to obtain the larvae or eggs on which they feed. The noise they make when striking the bark is heard at a considerable distance, and gives them the name of woodpeckers. They pass most of their time in a solitary manner, living in the depths of forests. The P. viridis, or green woodpecker, is the best known species in Britain as well as on the Continent. P. major, medius, and minor are likewise European species. P. principalis, or the ivory-billed woodpecker, P. auratus, or gold-winged woodpecker, are American birds, the latter being by some naturalists assigned to the genus Colaptes (C. auratus).

Picus major (Great Spotted Woodpecker).

Pig-boiling (pig'boil-ing), n. The decarbonization of pig-iron by contact with oxidized compounds of iron, whereby carbonic oxide is produced below the surface of the molten metal, and in escaping causes the appearance of ebullition or 'boiling.' Called also Wet-puddling.

Pigeon (pi'on), n. [Fr. pigeon, Walloon pioyon, It. piccione, from L. pipio, pipionis, a chirping bird, from pipio, to peep, to chirp, an imitative verb; comp. E. pipe, fife.] 1. One of the birds that form the family Columbidae, sub-order Columbae, and belong to the genera Columba, Ectopistes, Turtur, &c.; a dove, as the stock-dove, the ring-dove, the turtle-dove, and the migratory or wild pigeon of America. The pigeons are one of the most numerous, the most widely distributed, and in some respects the most interesting families of the feathered race. They may be considered as among the greatest consumers of the fruits of the earth. They are all almost exclusively vegetable feeders, and very voracious. Notwithstanding their numbers, their general distribution, and the proverbial kindness of their dispositions, only one species has been domesticated, the tame pigeon and all its beautiful varieties deriving their origin, it is believed, from the rock-pigeon (Columba livia). These varieties are distinguished by names expressive of their several most prominent characteristics, such as the carrier-pigeon, fan-tail, powter, shaker, tumbler, cropper, runt, &c. The Turkish pigeon is another variety. In their wild state pigeons live generally in flocks, and they pair for life. See PASSEN-

GER-PIGEON, POWTER, and also COLUMBAEOL. 2. A simpleton; a gull; a person swindled by gamblers: a slang term, opposed to rook.

Pile (pil), n. [Partly from Fr. píle, a heap, a pier, a pyramid, a voltaic pile, from L. pila, a pier or mole of stone, a pillar; partly also from A. Sax. píl, a stake, L. pilum, javelin.] 1. A heap; a mass or collection of things in an elevated form; as, a pile of stones; a pile of bricks; a pile of wood or timber; a pile of ruins.

What piles of wealth hath he accumulated To his own portion. Shak.

—To make one's pile, to make one's fortune. [American.]—2. A regularly formed mass, as a heap of shot or shell piled up by horizontal courses in a pyramidal, wedge-like, or other forms; a collection of combustibles arranged for burning a dead body.

Woe to the bloody city, I will even make the pile for fire great. Ezek. xxiv. 9.

3. In iron-working, same as Faggot, 2.—4. A large building or mass of buildings; an edifice; as, a noble pile; a venerable pile.

The Goree, a vast pile of warehouses close to one of the docks, was burned to the ground. De Quincey.

5. In elect. a series of plates of two dissimilar metals, such as copper and zinc, laid one above the other alternately, with cloth or paper placed between each pair, moistened with an acid solution, for producing a current of electricity. (See VOLTAIC and GALVANISM.) The term is sometimes used as synonymous with battery, for any form of apparatus designed to produce a current of dynamic electricity. (See GALVANIC.) The word is also applied to an apparatus for detecting slight changes of temperature. See THERMO-PILE.—6. In arch. and engin. piles are beams, generally of timber, pointed at the end, driven into the soil for the support of some superstructure or to form part of a wall, as of a coffer-dam or quay. For permanent works piles are driven in loose or uncertain strata in rows, leaving a space a few feet in width between them, and upon the heads of the piles the foundations of the superstructure are erected. In temporary constructions they are driven close together in single or double rows, so as to inclose a space of water and form a coffer-dam, from which the water is subsequently pumped out, and thus a dry space is obtained for laying the foundation of piers, &c., in bridges and other similar works. Iron piles are used for wharf walls and other purposes; they are hollow or tubular within, and are cast in various forms.

The foundation of the church of Haarlem is supported by wooden piles, as the houses in Amsterdam are. Locke.

—Pneumatic pile, one driven by atmospheric pressure when the air is exhausted from within it. —Screw pile, one with a screw at the lower end, and sunk by rotation aided by pressure if necessary. See SHEET-PILE. —7. In her. one of the lesser ordinarities, triangular in form, and issuing from the chief with the point downwards. When borne plain it should contain one-third of the chief in breadth, and if charged, two-thirds. —Per pile, a term used when the escutcheon is divided by lines in the form of the pile.

Pile (pil), v. t. pret. & pp. piled; ppr. piling. 1. To lay or throw into a heap; to collect many things into a mass; to heap up; as, to pile wood or stones. 'Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock.' Shak. —2. To bring into an aggregate; to accumulate; as, to pile quotations or comments.

Life piled on life
Were all too little. Tennyson.

3. To drive piles into; to furnish, strengthen, or support with piles. —To pile arms, in military tactics, to place three muskets in such a relative position that the butts shall remain firm upon the ground, and the muzzles be close together in an oblique direction. —To pile barley, to break off the awns of threshed barley.

Pile (pil), n. [Fr.; origin unknown.] One side of a coin; originally, a punch or punch-coin used in stamping figures on coins, and containing the figures to be impressed. Hence the arms, or reverse, side of a coin is called the pile, as distinguished from the obverse, which formerly bore a cross in the place of the head. Hence the game of cross and pile. See under CROSS.

Pile (pil), n. [D. pil, Dan. pil, pil, Sw. pil, G. pfeil, an arrow, from L. pilum, a javelin.] The head of an arrow; an arrow with a square head, used in a cross-bow; a small javelin.

When, on his hair-plumed helmet's crest, the dart first smote, then ran Into his forehead, and there stucke the Steele pile, making way
Quite through his skull. Chapman.

Pile (pil), n. [O. Fr. peil, from L. pilus, hair.] 1. A hair; a fibre of wool, cotton, and the like. —2. The nap, the fine hairy or woolly surface of cloth; also, the shag or hair on the skins of animals. 'Velvet soft, or plush with shaggy pile.' Cowper.

Pileate, Pileated (pil-ät, pil-ät-ed), a. [L. pilatus, a cap.] 1. Having the form of a cap or cover for the head. 'A pileated echinus taken up with different shells of several kinds.' Woodward. —2. In bot. having a cap or lid like the cap of a mushroom.

Pile-cap (pil'kap), n. In hydraulic engin. a beam connecting the heads of piles.

Pile-carpet (pil-kar'pet), n. A carpet in which the looped weft is cut so as to form a pile or downy surface.

Pile-clamp (pil'klam), n. In surg. an instrument for removing hemorrhoids.

Pile-driver (pil'driv-er), n. 1. A workman driving in piles. A common form shown in the cut consists of a large ram or block of iron, which slides between two guide-posts. Being drawn up to the top, and then let fall from a considerable height, it comes down on the head of the pile with a violent blow. It may be worked by men or horses, or a steam-engine. The most improved pile-driver is one in which the iron block is raised by means of a steam-hoist and automatically detached on reaching the top.

Pile-dwelling (pil'dwel-ing), n. A dwelling built on piles; a lake or lacustrine dwelling. See under LACUSTRINE.

Pile-engine (pil'en-jin), n. An engine for driving down piles. See PILE-DRIVER.

Pilfery (pil'fer-i), n. The act of pilfering; petty theft. 'A piece of pilfery.' Sir R. L'Estrange.

Pilgarlick (pil'gar-lik), n. [According to Wedgwood, 'one who peels garlick for others to eat; one who is made to endure hardships while others are enjoying themselves.' According to a writer in Notes and Queries garlic was a specific for leprosy, and as the lepers had to peel their own garlic, the word pilgarlick became a synonym for a leper. As leprosy denudes the head of hair, it is easy to see how a leper would come to be called a pilled garlic, and hence how the word came to have its two senses, first of a bald, and then of a shunned person.] One who has lost his hair by disease; a poor forsaken wretch.

Pilgrim (pil'grim), n. [Direct from the L. G. or Scand.; D. pelgrim, Dan. pilgrim, Sw. pelegrim, Icel. pilgrimur, same word as Fr. pelerin, It. pellegrino, all from L. peregrinus, a wanderer, a traveller in foreign parts, a foreigner—per, through, and ager, land.] 1. A wanderer; a traveller; particularly, one that travels to a distance from his own country to visit a holy place, or to pay his devotion to the remains of dead saints.

Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.

2. In Scrip. one who has only a temporary residence on earth; one who lives in the world, but is not of the world. Heb. xi. 13.

Pilgrim (pil'grim), a. Relating to pilgrims; travelling.

Till morning fair
Came forth, with pilgrim steps, in amice gray. Milton.

Pilgrim (pil'grim), v. i. To wander or ramble. [Rare.]

The ambulo hath no certain home or diet, but pilgrims up and down everywhere, feeding upon all sorts of plants. Grew.

A Temple and Seminary and Prophetic Mount, whereto all kindreds of the Earth will pilgrim. Caryle.

Pilgrimage (pil'grim-aj), n. 1. A journey undertaken by a pilgrim; a long journey, particularly a journey to some place deemed sacred and venerable for a devotional purpose.

Nowbray and myself are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage. Shak.

2. In Scrip. the journey of human life. Gen. xlvii. 9.—3. A time irksomely spent.

In prison thou hast spent a pilgrimage,
And, like a hermit, overpast thy days. Shak.

Pilgrimize (pil'grim-iz), v. i. pret. & pp. pilgrimized; ppr. pilgrimizing. To wander about as a pilgrim. B. Jonson.

Pili (pil'i), n. pl. [L. pilus, a hair.] In bot. fine slender bodies, like hair, covering some plants.

Pilidium (pi-lid'i-um), n. pl. Pilidia (pi-lid'i-a). [L. pilatus (which see), and Gr. eidos, resemblance.] In bot. the orbicular hemispherical shield of lichens, the outside of which changes to powder, as in Calycium.

Pilidia of Lichen.

Piliferous (pi-lif'er-us), a. [L. pilus, hair, and fero, I bear.] Bearing or producing hairs, as a leaf.

Piliform (pil'i-form), a. [L. pilus, a hair, and forma, shape.] Formed like or resembling down or hairs.

Pillaffe (pil'af), n. Same as Pillau.

Pillage (pil'aj), n. [Fr. pillage, from piller, to rob. See PILL, v.t.] 1. Plunder; spoil; that which is taken from another by open force, particularly and chiefly from enemies in war. 'Which pillage they with merry march bring home.' Shak.—2. The act of plundering. 'Pillage and robbery.' Shak. SYN. Plunder, rapine, spoil, depredation.

Pillage (pil'aj), v.t. pret. & pp. pillaged; ppr. pillaging. To strip of money or goods by open violence; to plunder; to spoil; as, troops pillaged the camp or towns of an enemy. It differs from stealing, as it implies open violence, and from robbery, which may be committed by one individual on another, whereas pillaging is usually the act of bands or numbers.

Pillager (pil'aj-er), n. One that pillages or plunders by open violence; a plunderer.

Jove's seed, the pillager,
Stood close before, and slackt the force the arrow did confer. Chapman.

Pillar (pil'er), n. [Fr. pilier, a pillar, from L. pila, a column. See PILE.] 1. A column; a columnar mass; by architects often distinguished from column, inasmuch as its section may be of any shape, and the whole mass not subject to the rules of classic architecture. A pillar may be used as a support or for ornament, or as a monument or memorial.

And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave.

Gen. xxxv. 20.

2. A supporter; one who sustains or upholds.

With grave
A pillar of state. Milton.

3. Something resembling a pillar in appearance.

And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light. Ex. xiii. 21.

4. A portable ornamental column formerly carried before a cardinal as emblematic of his support to the church.—5. In the manège, the centre of the volta, ring, or manegeground around which a horse turns. There are also pillars on the circumference or side, placed at certain distances by two and two.—6. In conch, same as Columella.—Pillar saint. See STYLITE.

bling those in the stocks, and holes through which were put the head and hands of an offender, by way of punishment. In this manner persons were formerly exposed to public view, and generally to public insult. It was a common punishment in Britain appointed for forestallers, users of deceitful weights, those guilty of perjury, forgery, libel, seditious writings, &c. It was abolished in 1837.

The jeers of a theatre, the pillory, and the whipping-post, are very near akin. Watts.

Pillory (pil'lo-ri), v.t. pret. & pp. pilloried; ppr. pillorying. 1. To punish with the pillory. 'Hungering for Puritans to pillory.' Macaulay. Hence—2. Fig. to expose to ridicule, contempt, abuse, and the like. 'Franchises . . . which have sometimes been pilloried with scoffing or irregular names.' Gladstone.

Pillour, n. [Fr. pileur, robber.] A plunderer. Chaucer.

Pillow (pil'lo), n. [O.E. pillwe, puilwe, a. Sax. pyle; probably like D. peluwe, a pillow, from L. pulvinus, a cushion.] 1. A long cushion to support the head of a person when reposing, filled with feathers, down, or other soft material.

Weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth
Finds the down pillow hard. Shak.

2. Naut. the block on which the inner end of a bowsprit is supported.—3. A brass bearing for the journal of a shaft, carried by a plumber-block.—4. A kind of plain fustian.—The pillow of a plough is a cross piece of wood which serves to raise or lower the beam.

Pilosity (pil-os'i-ti), n. Hairiness. Bacon.
Pilot (pil'ot), n. [Perhaps from O.D. pylōot, a pilot, said to be from pylen, to sound the depth, and loot, the sounding-lead; but the word seems rather to be a Romance word: Fr. pilote, Sp. and Pg. piloto, It. piloto, piłota, the origin of which is not clear.] 1. One of a ship's crew or company having the charge of the helm and the ship's route; a steersman. 'To take the pilot's rudder in his hand.' Dryden.

His bark is stoutly timber'd and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance. Shak.

2. Now more usually, a person qualified and appointed by proper authority to conduct ships into and out of particular harbours, or along certain coasts, channels, &c., at a certain fixed rate, depending on the draught of water and distance. The pilot has the charge of the vessel while in pilot's water, and the captain or master neglects or opposes the pilot's advice on his own responsibility. Pilots are established in various parts of the country by ancient charters of incorporation, or by particular statute.—3. A guide; a director of the course of another person; one who has the conduct of any affair requiring skill and vigilance.—4. The cow-catcher of a locomotive. Pilot-fish (pi'lôt-fish), n. A fish of the family Scomberidae and genus Naucrates (N.

Pilot-fish (Naucrates ductor).

ductor), called also Rudder-fish: so named because it frequently accompanies ships. It is almost a foot long, and much resembles the mackerel, and is supposed to have been the pompilus of the ancients, a fish which is said to have pointed out the desired course to navigators, accompanied them throughout their voyage, and left them when they reached the wished-for land. It was therefore considered sacred. Besides the habit of attending ships at sea for weeks, and even months, the pilot-fish also accompanies large sharks; hence it has been supposed to guide that voracious fish to its food. The true reason, however, seems to be that it picks up portions of food unworthy of the shark's notice.

Pilotism, Pilotry (pi'lôt-izm, pi'lôt-ri), n. Pilotage; skill in piloting.

Pilot-jack (pi'lôt-jak), n. A union or other flag hoisted by a vessel for a pilot.

Pilular (pi'lü-lär), a. Pertaining to pills; as, a pilular mass; a pilular form.

Pilularia (pi'lü-lä-ri-ä), n. [From L. pilula, a pill, from the shape of the heads containing the reproductive organs.] A genus of creeping plants belonging to the nat. order Marsileaceæ. P. globulifera, or creeping pillowwort, is a British species found on the margins of lakes and pools, and in places that are partially overflooded. It has a slender creeping root-stock, and bright green grass-like leaves, at the base of which are the round brown fan-celled capsules.

Pilumnus (pi-lum'nus), n. [L. pilus, a hair.] 1. A genus of brachyurous decapod crustaceans, so called from the carapace being covered with hairs.—2. Bonaparte's name for the North American genus of woodpeckers, Sphyrapicus.

Pilwe,† n. A pillow. Chaucer.

Pilwe-bere,† n. The covering of a pillow; a pillow-bear; a pillow-case. Chaucer.

Pimaric (pi-mar'ik), a. A term applied to an acid resin occurring in the turpentine of the maritime pine.

Pimelic (pi-mel'ik), a. [Gr. pimelë, fat.] Obtained from a fatty substance.—Pimelic acid ($C_8H_{12}O_4$), an acid which results from the action of nitric acid on oleic acid.

Pimelite (pim-el'it), n. [Gr. pimele, fat, and lithos, stone.] A mineral of an apple-green colour, fat and unctuous to the touch, tender, and not fusible by the blowpipe. It is supposed to be coloured by nickel. It is a variety of steatite.

Pimelodus (pi-mel-ö'dus), n. [Gr. pimele, fat, and eidos, likeness.] A genus of mala-copterygian abdominal fishes, separated from the genus Silurus of Linnæus. The species are numerous, and are found chiefly in South America, the Nile, and some of the eastern rivers. One species (P. cyclopus), 6 inches long, is sometimes ejected in thousands from the crater or the apertures on the sides of volcanoes. They are supposed to abound in subterranean lakes.

Pimelodus cyclopus.

Piment† (pi'ment), n. Wine with a mixture of spice or honey.

Pimenta (pi-men'ta), n. Same as Pimento.

Pimento (pi-men'to), n. [Sp. pimienta, pimiento, It. pimento, from L. pigmentum, paint, juice of plants, anything spicy.] All-spice, the berry of Eugenia Pimenta (Pimenta officinalis), a tree, native of the West Indies, but cultivated almost exclusively in Jamaica, thence called Jamaica Pepper. The unripe berries, which are about the size of a pea, are dried in the sun. The shell incloses two seeds, which are roundish, dark brown, having a weak aromatic taste. The berries have an aromatic taste and smell, considered to resemble a mixture of those of cinnamon, cloves, and nutmeg, whence the name allspice. As an aromatic stimulant pimento stands intermediate between pepper and cloves, and is useful in dyspepsia depending upon atony of the stomach, and in diarrhæa dependent upon a similar cause. Pimento yields by distillation an oil resembling oil of cloves.

Pimento.

Piminet† (pim'je-net), n. A pimple on the face. Nares.

Pimp (pimp), n. [Origin unknown. Perhaps a nasalized form of pipe (Fr. pimpa, a pipe), lit. to whistle for females like a call-bird.] One who provides gratifications for the lust of others; a procurer; a pander.

gether, or as a support from which a thing may be hung; a peg; a bolt.

With pins of adamant
And chains they made all fast. Milton.

2. A small piece of wire, generally brass, pointed at one end and with a rounded head at the other, much used as a cheap and ready means of fastening clothes, attaching papers, and the like. Pins were formerly made by hand labour, and went through some fourteen different processes before they were fit for the market; but several beautiful inventions have been employed to make them entirely or in a great measure by machinery, for the most part automatic. The heads, formerly made of a separate piece of spirally twisted wire, smaller than the pin, are now formed in a die from the body of the pin itself.—3. Often used typically for a thing of very small value; a trifle.

I do not set my life at a pin's fee. Shak.

4. That which resembles a pin in shape or use; as, (a) a peg in stringed musical instruments for increasing or diminishing the tension of the strings. (b) A lynch-pin. Pipa (pí'pa), n. A genus of batrachians, the best-known species of which is the Surinam toad (P. surinamensis), a native of Guiana and other warm parts of America. Its colour is brownish-olive above and whitish below. It is sometimes 7 inches long, and has a peculiarly hideous aspect. It is particularly interesting on account of its mode of rearing the young. After the female has laid the eggs the male places them upon her back, fecundates them, and then presses them into cellulæ, which at that period open for their reception, and afterwards close over them. In these cellulæ on the mother's back the eggs are hatched and the young pass their tadpole state, for they do not leave their domicile till their legs are formed.

Pipe (pip), n. [A. Sax. and L. G. pipe, a pipe; D. pippe, Sw. and Icel. pipa, Dan. pibe, G. pfife, all of Romance or L. L. origin (Fr. pipe, It. pg, and Sp. pipa, a pipe), from L. pipo, pipio, to cheep, chirp, or peep, an imitative word.] 1. A wind-instrument of music, consisting of a tube of wood or metal. The word is not now the proper technical name of any particular instrument, but is applicable to any tubular wind-instrument, and it occurs in bagpipe. The collection of tubes in an organ which produce the various sounds are called pipes or organ-pipes. Pipes supplied with wind from the mouth are usually pierced with several holes, which are stopped by the fingers to vary the pitch of the sounds.

They are not a pipe for Fortune's finger,
To sound what stop she pleases. Shak.

2. A long tube or hollow body made of various materials, as iron, lead, tin, copper, earthenware, &c.: applied to many hollow bodies, particularly such as are used for the conveyance of water, gas, steam, and other fluids.—3. A tube of clay or other material with a bowl at one end, used in smoking tobacco, opium, or other narcotic or medicinal substance.—4. Piracy (pi'ra-si), n. [See PIRATE.] 1. The act, practice, or crime of robbing on the high seas; the taking of property from others by open violence and without authority, on the sea; a crime that answers to robbery on land.

In those days a Northman took to piracy as soon as his ship was launched as naturally as a cygnet takes to the water. Edin. Rev.

Other acts besides robbery on the high seas are declared by statute to be piracy. Thus if any commander, or other seafaring person, betrays his trust and runs away with any ship, boat, goods, &c., or if he yields them up voluntarily to a pirate, or conspires to do any of these acts, he is adjudged a pirate. Also the trading with known pirates, or in any way aiding them, or confederating or corresponding with them, is deemed piracy. The dealing in slaves on the high seas is likewise piracy.—2. Literary theft; any infringement on the law of copyright.

Piragua (pi-rá'gwa), n. A rude canoe. See PIROGUE.

Pirai (pi-rí'), n. The Serrasalmo Piraya, a voracious fresh-water fish of tropical America. Its jaws are armed with lancet-shaped teeth as sharp as those of the shark. Cattle when fording rivers are sometimes terribly bitten by them. The natives of Guiana sharpen their tiny arrows for the blow-pipe by drawing them between two of the teeth, which shave them to a point with their sharp edges. It is 3 or 4 feet in length. Called also Piraya.

Piramer (pi-rám-et-ér), n. [Gr. peira, a trial, and metron, measure.] The name given to an instrument for ascertaining the power required to draw carriages over roads.

Piscatorial (pis-kä-tör'i-al), a. Relating to fishing; piscatory.

Piscatory (pis'ka-tör-i), a. [L. piscatorius, pertaining to fishermen, from piscator, a fisherman, from piscis, a fish.] Relating to fishermen or to fishing; pertaining to angling; as, the piscatory art. 'Piscatory eclogues.' Addison.

Pisces (pis'séz), n. pl. [L. piscis, a fish.] 1. In astron. the Fishes, the twelfth sign or constellation in the zodiac, next to Aries. It is denoted by the character ♓ , and represented by two fishes tied together by the tails. According to the Egyptian mythology the Pisces were hieroglyphic of the spring season, when the fishing commences.—2. The name of the first great subdivision of vertebrate animals, or the class fishes, characterized by a branchial respiration, a bilocular heart, fins with osseous rays in the median line of the body, and for the most part a covering of scales. 'The first class of the Vertebrata is that of the Fishes (Pisces), which may be broadly defined as including vertebrate animals which are provided with gills throughout the whole of life; the heart when present consists (except in Dipnoi) of a single auricle and a single ventricle; the blood is cold; the limbs when present are in the form of fins, or expansions of the integument; and there is neither an amnion nor allantois in the embryo, unless the latter is represented by the urinary bladder.' H. A. Nicholson.

Piscapture (pis'i-kap-tür), n. [L. piscis, a fish, and captura, capture, from capio, to take.] The taking of fish; angling, netting, &c.

Piscicultural (pis-i-kul'tü-ral), a. Connected with or relating to pisciculture.

Pisciculture (pis-i-kul'tür), n. [L. piscis, a fish, and cultura, culture, from colo, cultum, to cultivate.] The breeding, rearing, preservation, feeding, and fattening of fish by artificial means; fish culture. Pisciculture has been practised from very early ages. It appears to have been in use in ancient Egypt, and was followed in China in early times on a very large scale. It was revived in this country by Mr. Shaw of Drumlanrig in 1833. One great point in modern pisciculture is the propagation and rearing of young fish in artificial ponds with the view of introducing fish previously not found in the locality. Salmon and trout ova have been sent from Britain, and successfully propagated in Australia and New Zealand. The art has now come into general favour and is widely followed, very many rivers having on their banks breeding and rearing establishments for the purpose of increasing the stock of fish in the streams. A very successful effort has been carried out at Stormontfield, near Perth, on the Tay. From Huningue, near Basel, on the Rhine, millions of ova are annually despatched to England, Germany, Spain, and other countries. The art is every year receiving greater development, and promises to become yet an important department of commercial industry.

Pisciculturist (pis-i-kul'tür-ist), n. One who practises pisciculture; one who rears fish.

Piscidia (pis-sid'i-a), n. [L. piscis, a fish, and cedo, to kill, because the leaves, bark, and twigs are used for the purpose of stupefying fish.] A genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosæ. The species are West Indian trees, with broad unequally pinnate leaves, and terminal panicles of white and red flowers. The bark of the root of P. Erythrina (dogwood tree) is a powerful narcotic, and is used as a substitute for opium, and also for poisoning fish. The timber of this tree is heavy, resinous, and almost imperishable; hence it makes excellent piles for docks and wharfs.

Pisciform (pis'i-form), a. [L. piscis, a fish, and forma, shape.] Having the shape of a fish.

Piscina (pis'si-na), n. [L., a cistern, a fish-pond, from piscis, a fish.] A niche on the south side of the altar in churches, containing or having attached a small basin and water - drain, through which the priest empties the water in which he washes his hands, and also that in which the chalice is rinsed.

Pisolite (pi'sö-lit), n. [Gr. pison, a pea, and lithos, a stone.] A carbonate of lime slightly coloured by the oxide of iron. It occurs in little globular concretions of the size of a pea or larger, which usually contain each a grain of sand as a nucleus. These concretions in union sometimes compose entire beds of secondary mountains. Pisolite differs from oolite only in the greater size of the particles of which it is made up. Called also Calcareous Tufo, Pea-grit, and Pea-stone.

Pisolitic (pi-sö-lit'ik), a. In mineral, composed of pisolite; containing pisolite; resembling pisolite.

Piscina, Fiefield, Essex.

Pisophalt (pis'ô-falt), n. A corrupt spelling of Pissasphalt (which see).

Piss (pis), v.t. [Fr. pisser, D. and G. piszen, Sw. pissa, Dan. pisse, W. pisaw, to make water.] To discharge the liquor secreted by the kidneys and lodged in the urinary bladder; to urinate.

Piss (pis), v.t. To eject, as urine. Shak.

Piss (pis), n. Urine; the liquor secreted by the kidneys into the bladder of an animal, and discharged through the proper channel.

Piss-a-bed (pis'a-bed), n. [From the diuretic properties of the expressed juice of the root.] The dandelion. [Vulgar.]

Pissasphalt, Pissasphaltum (pis'as-falt, pis-as-falt'um), n. [From Gr. pissasphaltos—pissa, pitch, and asphaltos, asphalt; Sp. pisasfalto.] Earth-pitch; a soft bitumen of the consistence of tar, black, and of a strong smell. It is inflammable, and intermediate between petroleum and asphalt, containing a greater relative quantity of liquid hydrocarbons, &c., than the latter. Written also Pisphalt and Pisphalt.

Piss-burnt (pis'bênt), a. Stained brown, as if scorched, with urine. Johnson. [Vulgar.]

Pisselæum (pis-el-ê'um), n. [Gr. pissa, pitch, and elaion, oil.] An oily matter obtained from boiling pitch. Dunglison.

Pisspot (pis'pôt), n. A chamber-pot.

It would vex one more to be knocked on the head with a pisspot than a thunder-bolt. Pope.

Pist, Piste (pêst), n. [Fr. piste, It. pesta, a track, from L. pistus, pp. of pisso, to pound, to beat in a mortar, to bruise.] The track or footprint of a horseman on the ground he goes over.

Pistachio (pis-tâ'shi-ô), n. Same as Pistachio-nut. Bacon.

Pistachio-nut (pis-tâ'shi-ô-nut), n. [See PISTACIA.] The nut of the Pistacia vera. It contains a kernel of a pale greenish colour, of a pleasant taste, resembling that of the almond, and yielding a well-tasted oil. It is wholesome and nutritive, and is used at dessert, and for astringent emulsions. See PISTACIA.

Pistachio-tree (pis-tâ'shi-ô-trê), n. [Sp. pistachio, See PISTACIA.] Same as Pistacia.

Pistacia (pis-tâ'shi-a), n. [L. pistacia, Gr. pistakia, from Per. pista, the pistachio tree.]

Pistacia vera.

A genus of small trees of from 15 to 20 feet high, with pinnate leaves, and axillary panicles of small apetalous flowers, nat. order Anacardiaceæ. P. vera yields the pistachio-nuts of the shops, which form a considerable article of commerce. (See PISTACHIO-NUT.) The tree is a native of Western Asia, but is cultivated all over the south of Europe, where the fruit is in request for confectionery and for the dessert. Mastic is the produce of P. Lentiscus. P. Terebinthus, or turpentine tree, yields Chios turpentine.

Pistacite, Pistazite (pis'ta-sit, pis'ta-zit). See EPIDOTE.

Pistareen (pis-ta-rên'), n. An old Spanish silver coin of the value of 9d. sterling.

Pistell, ç. An epistle; a short lesson. Chaucer.

Pistia (pis'ti-a), n. A genus of tropical water-weeds of the nat. order Pistiaceæ of some botanists and Lemnaceæ of others. The plants consist of a rose-shaped tuft of wedge-shaped, slightly concave, notched or round-topped leaves, 2 to 5 inches long, of a delicate pale pea-green, covered with fine hairs.

Pistiaceæ (pis-ti-â's-ê-ê). See LEMNACEÆ.

Pistil (pis'til), n. [L. pistillum, a pestle, a dim. from pisso, pistum, to pound, to beat in a mortar.] In bot. the seed-bearing organ of a flower, consisting of the ovary, the stigma, and often also of a style. In the figure, a is the style, b the stigma; the ovary is concealed in the flower. Each modified leaf which forms the pistil is called a carpel, the two edges of which, coming into contact, cohere, and form the placenta. The form of the pistil must depend on that of the carpels, on their number, and on their arrangement. A simple pistil is formed of a single carpel, and a compound pistil of several carpels.

Pistil.

Pistillary (pis'til-la-ri), a. In bot. of or belonging to the pistil.—Pistillary cord, a channel which passes from the stigma through the style into the ovary.

Pistillate (pis'til-lât), a. Having a pistil.

Pistillation (pis'til-la'shon), n. [L. pistillum, a pestle.] The act of pounding in a mortar.

Pistillidia (pis'til-li-dî-a), n. pl. [L. pistillum, a pistil, and Gr. eidos, resemblance.] In bot. (a) organs in mosses having the apparent functions of pistils. (b) Young spore-cases, the archegonia in ferns.

Pistilliferous (pis'til-li-fêr-us), a. [Pistil, and L. fero, to bear.] In bot. having a pistil without stamens, as a female flower.

Pistol (pis'tol), n. [Fr. pistole, pistolet; It. and Sp. pistola, a pistol; said to be from Pistoia, a town near Florence where little poniards were made, called in France first pistoyers, then pistoliers, and finally pistolets. From being applied to diminutive poniards the name came to be given to miniature firearms.] A small firearm, or the smallest firearm used, designed to be fired with one hand only. Pistols are of different lengths, some of them being so small as to be carried in the pocket. Those now used are generally of the kind called revolvers. Pistols were introduced into England in 1521.

Pistol (pis'tol), v.t. pret. & pp. pistolled; ppr. pistolling. [Fr. pistoler.] To shoot with a pistol.

Those Sons of Freedom would have pistolled, stabbed—in some way slain—that man by coward hands. Dickens.

Pistolade (pis'to-lâd), n. The discharge of a pistol; a pistol-shot.

Pistole (pis-tôl'), n. [Fr. The same word as the above, according to Littré, who says that as the pistol (Fr. pistolet) was a small firearm, the gold half-crown was called pistole, pistolet, in pleasantry, as being a diminutive of the crown, in the same way as a small loaf is called pistolet at Brussels.] An old gold coin current in Spain, France, and some neighbouring states, valued on an average at about 16s. sterling.

Pistole (pis'tol-et'), n. [Fr.] 1. A small pistol.—2. A diminutive of pistole, a Spanish coin. Donne.

Piston (pis'ton), n. [Fr. and Sp. piston, from L. pisso, pistum, to beat, to pound, to press. See PESTLE.] In mach. a movable piece, generally of a cylindrical form, so fitted as to occupy the sectional area of a tube, such as the barrel of a pump or the cylinder of a steam-engine, and capable of being driven alternately in two directions by pressure on either of its sides. One of its sides is fitted to a rod, called the piston-rod, to which it either imparts reciprocatory motion, as in the steam-engine, where the motion given to the piston-rod is communicated to the machinery; or by which it is itself made to move, as in the pump. Two sorts of pistons are used in pumps; one hollow with a valve, used in the sucking pump, and the other used in pumps; one hollow with a valve, used in the sucking pump, and the other solid, which is employed in the forcing pump, and is called a plunger.—Piston-packing, a material, such as hempen cord, or a device, such as metallic rings, springs, &c., placed round a piston, to cause it to fit closely within its cylinder, and at the same time allow its free backward and forward motion.

Piston-rod (pis'ton-rod), n. See PISTON.

Piston-spring (pis'ton-spring), n. A coil around or inside a piston, which, by expanding, acts as packing.

Pisum (pi'sum), n. [L., a pea.] The pea, a genus of plants of the nat. order Leguminosæ. See PEA.

Pit (pit), n. [A. Sax. pitt, pytt, a hole, a pit; D. put, Icel. pittir, a well; from L. putus (Fr. puits), a well.] 1. A hollow or cavity more or less deep, either natural or made by digging in the earth; as, (a) the shaft of a mine; a coal-mine. (b) In found- ing, a cavity or hollow scooped in the floor to receive cast-metal. (c) A vat in tanning, bleaching, dyeing, &c. (d) A sunken place where charcoal is piled for burning. (e) In hort, an excavation in the soil, generally covered by a glazed frame, for protecting many kinds of plants.—2. A deep place; an abyss: with the definite article sometimes used for the abode of evil spirits, sometimes for the grave or the place of the dead.

Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave: thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit. Ps. xxx. 3.

3. A deep concealed hole in the ground for snaring wild beasts.—4. Any hollow, cavity, or depression in the flesh; as, the arm pits; the pit of the stomach; the pits left on the flesh by a pustule of the small-pox.—5. A place or area where cocks or dogs are brought to fight, or where dogs are trained to kill rats.—6. That part of a theatre which is on the floor of the house, somewhat below the level of the stage, and behind the orchestra. 7. The stone of a fruit, as of a cherry or plum. [Local American.]—The bottomless pit, hell. Rev. xx. 1.—Pit and gallowes, in feudal times, a privilege granted by the crown to the barons, by which they were empowered to drown the women condemned for theft in a pit, and to hang the men on a gallows.

Pit (pit), v.t. pret. & pp. pitted; ppr. pitting. 1. To lay in a pit or hole. 'They lived like beasts and were pitted like beasts.' Granger. 2. To form a little pit or hollow in; to mark with little hollows, as by the pustules of the small-pox.

An anasarca, a species of dropsy, is characterized by the shining and softness of the skin, which gives way to the least impression, and remains pitted for some time. Sharpe.

3. To set in competition; to set against one another, as in combat; lit. like cocks in a pit.

Pit (pit), v.t. To put. [Scotch.]

Pita (pi-tâ), n. [Sp.] A name of the Agave americana or maguey, and other species of the same genus; also, of the useful fibre obtained from them.

Pitance (pit'ans), n. [See PITTANCE.] A mess of victuals. Chaucer.

Plaiter (plāt'ér), n. One who or that which plaits or braids.

Plan (plan), n. [Fr. plan, from L. planus, plain, flat, level. See PLAIN.] 1. Properly the representation of anything drawn on a plane, as a map or chart; but the word is usually applied to the representation of a horizontal section of a building, such as it appears or is intended to appear on the ground, showing the extent, division, and distribution of its area into apartments, rooms, passages, &c. The raised plan of a building is the same with what is otherwise called an elevation. A geometrical plan is that wherein the solid or vacant parts are represented in their natural proportions. A perspective plan is one, the lines of which follow the rules of perspective, reducing the sizes of more distant parts. The term plan may be applied to the draught or representation of any projected work on paper or on a plain surface; as, the plan of a town or city, or of a harbour or fort.—2. A scheme devised; a project; as, the plan of a constitution of government; the plan of a treaty; the plan of an expedition.—3. Disposition of parts according to a certain design.

Let us Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man, A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

4. A method or process; a way; a custom.

The good old rule Sufficeth them, the simple plan, That they should take who have the power, And they should keep who can. Wordsworth.

SYN. Draught, delineation, plot, sketch, scheme, project, design, contrivance, device, method, process, way.

Plan (plan), v.t. pret. & pp. planned; ppp. planning. 1. To invent or contrive for construction; as, to plan an edifice.—2. To scheme; to devise; to form in design; as, to plan the conquest of a country. 'Plan with all thy arts the scene of fate.' Pope.

Planarian (plā-nā'ri-an), n. [From L. planus, flat.] An annelid of the order Planarida.

Planarida (plā-nā'ri-da), n. pl. The planarians, a sub-order of flat, soft-bodied annelids, of the order Turbellaria, mostly oval or elliptical in shape, and not unlike the foot of a gastropodous mollusc. They are for the most part aquatic in their habits, occurring in fresh-water or on the seashore, but are found occasionally in moist earth. The male and female organs are united in the same individual, and the process of reproduction may be either sexual, by means of true ova, or non-sexual, by internal gemmation or transverse fission. The sub-order is divided into sections—Rhabdocæla, characterized by a straight, unbranching intestine, and a body elongated, rounded, or oval, and Dendrocæla, having a branched or arborescent intestine, and a flat, broad body.

Planarioid (plā-nā'ri-oid), n. Like a planarian in form.

Planary (plā-nā'ri), a. Pertaining to a plane.

Planceer (plan-sér'), n. The same as Plancher.

Planch (plānsh), n. A plank. Fanshawe.

Planch (plānsh), v.t. [Fr. planche, a plank. See PLANK.] To plank; to make or cover with planks or boards. 'A planned gate.' Shak. 'Planch on a piece as broad as thy cap.' By. Still.

Plancher (plānsh'ér), n. [Fr. plancher.] 1. A plank. Drayton.—2. A floor of wood. Bacon.—3. In arch. same as Plafond.—4. In anat. the inferior wall or boundary of a cavity.

Plancher (plānsh'ér), v.i. To make a floor of wood. Abp. Sanerfort.

Planchet (plānsh'et), n. [Fr. planchette. See PLANK.] A flat piece of metal intended for a coin, with a smooth surface for receiving the die impression.

Planchette (plān-shet'), n. 1. A small plank or board; specifically, a name given by believers in 'spirit manifestations' to a heart-shaped piece of board mounted on thin supports, two of which are castors, and one a pencil which makes marks as the board is pushed under the hands of those whose fingers rest upon it.—2. A circumferentor (which see).

Plane (plān), a. [From L. planus. See PLAIN.] Without elevations or depressions; even; level; flat; as, a plane surface; a plane mirror.—Plane angle, an angle contained between two straight lines meeting in a plane.—Plane chart. See CHART.—Plane figure, in geom., a plane surface terminated everywhere by lines.—Plane geometry, the geometry of plane figures, in contradistinction to solid geometry, or the geometry of solids.—Plane problem, a problem which can be solved by the intersections of right lines and circles.—Plane sailing, in navig., the art of determining a ship's place, on the supposition that she is moving on a plane, or that the surface of the ocean is plane instead of being spherical. This supposition may be adopted for short distances without leading to great errors; and it affords great facilities in calculation, as the place of the ship is found by the solution of a right-angled triangle. In plane sailing the principal terms made use of are the course, distance, departure, and difference of latitude, any two of which being given, the others can be found.—Plane scale, in navig., a scale on which are graduated chords, sines, tangents, secants, rhumbs, geographical miles, &c.—Plane surveying, the surveying of tracts of moderate extent, without regarding the curvature of the earth.—Plane trigonometry. See TRIGONOMETRY.

Plane surface, n. 1. A smooth or perfectly level surface; a part of something having a level surface; as, to roll a body upon an inclined plane; the plane of a dial, that is, the level surface on which the lines marking the hours are drawn.—2. In geom. a surface such that if any two points whatever in it be joined by a straight line, the whole of the straight line will be in the surface. The term plane is frequently employed to express an ideal surface, supposed to cut and pass through solid bodies or in various directions; and in this sense it is frequently used in astronomy; as, the plane of the ecliptic; the plane of a planet's orbit.—3. A joiner's tool consisting of a smooth-soled stock, with an aperture, through which passes obliquely a piece of edged steel or a chisel, used in paring or smoothing boards or wood of any kind. There are various sorts of planes; as, the jack plane (about 17 inches long), used for taking off the roughest and most prominent parts of the stuff; the trying plane, which is used after the jack plane; the long plane (26 inches long), used when a piece of stuff is to be planed very straight; the jointer, still longer than the long plane, which is used for obtaining very straight edges; the smoothing plane

(7½ inches long), and block plane (12 inches long), chiefly used for cleaning off finished work, and giving the utmost degree of smoothness to the surface of the wood; the compass plane, which is similar to the Rebate.

smoothing plane, but has its under surface convex, its use being to form a concave cylindrical surface. The foregoing are technically called bench planes. There is also a species of planes called rebate planes, the first of which is simply called the rebate plane, being chiefly used for making rebates. Of the sinking rebating planes there are two sorts, the moving fillister and the Fillister, side and end.

sash fillister, the first for sinking the edge of the stuff next the workman, and the second for sinking the opposite edge. The plough is a plane for sinking a channel or groove in a surface not close to the edge of it. Moulding planes are for forming mouldings, and must vary according to the design. The bead plane is used for mouldings whose section is semicircular. Planes are also used for smoothing metal, and are wrought by machinery. See PLANING-MACHINE.

Plane (plān), v.t. 1. To make smooth, especially by the use of a plane; as, to plane wood.—2. To free from difficulties; to clear; to make smooth.

What student came but that you planed her path To Lady Psyche. Tennyson.

Plane (plān), n. A plane-tree.

Plane-guide (plān'gid), n. In joinery, an adjustable attachment to a plane-stock, used in bevelling the edges of boards.

Plane-iron (plān'ī-ern), n. The cutting iron of a plane. Plane-irons are made either double or single, and are armed with a steel cutting edge.

Planeometry (plā-nom'et-ri), n. [Plane, and Gr. metron, a measure.] The art of ascertaining the area or superficial contents of any surface.

Planer (plān'ér), n. 1. In printing, a wooden block used to smooth the face of a form of type before printing; the top is sometimes covered with leather to deaden the blow of the mallet.—2. A planing-machine.

Planera (plā-n'ér-a), n. [After J. S. Planer, a German botanist.] A genus of Asiatic and North American trees, closely related to elms. The timber of P. Richardi (the zelkova tree) is much prized. Specimens of the genus are found fossil in the miocene strata of Switzerland.

Planer-head (plān'ér-head), n. The slide-rest of a planing-machine.

Planer-tree (plān'ér-trē), n. A tree of the genus Planera.

Plane-stock (plān'stok), n. The body of a plane in which the cutting-iron is fitted.

Planet (plan'et), n. [L. planeta, a planet, from Gr. planētēs, a wanderer, from planáo, to wander.] A celestial body which revolves about the sun or other centre, or a body revolving about another planet as its centre. The planets which revolve about the sun as their centre are called primary planets; those which revolve about other planets as their centre, and with them revolve about the sun, are called secondary planets, satellites, or moons. The primary planets are named Mercury, Venus, Earth, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune. Called also major planets. The minor planets are numerous small bodies, called also planetoids or asteroids, which have been discovered since the beginning of the last century between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter. Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune, being without the earth's orbit, are sometimes called the superior planets; Venus and Mercury, being within the earth's orbit, are called inferior planets. The family of major planets has also been subdivided into intra-asteroidal planets—Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Mars; and extra-asteroidal planets—Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune. This division is not arbitrary, since the characteristics of the planets travelling within the zone of asteroids differ in the most marked manner from the characteristics of the planets travelling outside that zone. Planets are so named from their motion or revolution in distinction from the fixed stars, from which they can be at once distinguished by their clear steady light, while the latter have a sparkling or twinkling appearance. See STAR.

Plane-table (plān'tā-bl), n. An instrument employed in land-surveying, by means of which a plan may be made on the spot without the measurement of angles. It consists of a plane rectangular or circular board, mounted on a stand, and having attached a movable telescope with sights and a magnetic needle so that accurate bearings may be obtained.

Planetarium (plan-et-ā-ri-um), n. An astronomical machine which, by the movement of its parts, represents the motions and orbits of the planets. See ORRERY.

Planetary (plan'et-ā-ri), a. [Fr. planétaire.] 1. Pertaining to the planets; as, planetary inhabitants; planetary motions. —2. Consisting of planets; as, a planetary system. —3. In astrol. under the dominion or influence of a planet. 'Born in the planetary hour of Saturn.' Addison. —4. Produced by, or under the influence of, planets.

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-viced city hang his poison.
Shak.

5. Having the nature of a planet; erratic or revolving. —Planetary days, the days of the week as shared among the planets known to the ancients, each having its day. —Planetary nebula, a nebula showing a uniform disk, like that of a planet, and not resolvable into stars. —Planetary years, the periods of time in which the several planets make their revolutions round the sun.

Planeted (plan'et-ed), a. Belonging to planets. [Rare.]

Tell me, ye stars, ye planets; tell me, all
Ye star'd and planeted inhabitants, what is it,
What are these sons of wonder! Young.

Planetical† (pla-net'i-kal), a. Pertaining to planets. 'Some planetical exhalation, or a descending star.' Dr. Spencer.

Planetoid (plan-et-oid), n. [Planet, and Gr. eidōs, resemblance.] One of a numerous group of very small planets revolving round the sun between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter, remarkable for the eccentricity of their orbits and the large size of their angle of inclination to the ecliptic. The diameter of the largest is not supposed to exceed 450 miles, while most of the others are supposed to be very much smaller. The known planetoids are upwards of 200 in number, and new members are being constantly discovered. Ceres was the first to be detected, being observed for the first time by Piazzi, an Italian astronomer, on 1st January, 1801, and since 1845 no year has passed without the discovery of new members. Called also Asteroids.

Planetoidal (plan'et-oid-al), a. Of or pertaining to the planetoids; relating to a planetoid.

Plane-tree (plān'tré), n. [Fr. plane, platane, from L. platanus, the plane-tree.] A tree of the genus Platanus, nat. order Platanaceæ. The oriental plane-tree (P. orientalis) is a native of Asia; it rises with a straight smooth branching stem to a great height, with palmate leaves and long pendulous peduncles, sustaining several heads of small close-sitting flowers. The seeds are downy, and collected into round, rough, hard balls. It is the handsomest of all the hardy deciduous trees in cultivation, and is perfectly suited to the climate of England. Its timber is fine-grained, hard, and well suited to such kinds of joiners' work as do not require strength, for which its brittle-ness renders it unsuitable. The occidental plane-tree (P. occidentalis), which grows to a great height, is a native of North America; it is called also button-wood and button-tree. Both species have the singular property of throwing off their old bark in hard plates of irregular size and form. In Scotland the name plane-tree is commonly given to the sycamore (Acer pseudo-platanus), which resembles the true planes in its foliage. See PLATANACEÆ.

Oriental Plane-tree (Platanus orientalis).

Planet-stricken, Planet-struck (plan'et-strik-n, plan'et-struk), a. Affected by the influence of planets; blasted. 'Since I saw you I have been planet-struck.' Suckling.

Like planet-stricken men of yore
He trembles smitten to the core
By strong compunctions and remorse.
Wordsworth.

Planetule (plan'et-ül), n. A little planet.

Planet-wheels (plan'et-whēlz), n. pl. An epicyclic train of mechanism for producing a variable angular motion, such as that of the radius vector of a planet in its orbit. The common contrivance for this purpose consists of two elliptical wheels connected by teeth running into each other, and revolving on their foci. While the driving-wheel moves uniformly, the radius vector of the other has the required motion. See Epicycloidal Wheel under EPICYCLOIDAL, and Sun-and-planet Wheels under SUN.

Plangent (plan'jent), a. [L. plangens, plangētis, ppr. of plango, to beat.] Beating; dashing, as a wave. 'The plangent wave.' Sir H. Taylor. [Rare.]

Planifolious (plā-ni-fō-li-us), a. [L. planus, plain, and folium, a leaf.] An epithet applied by some botanists to a flower made up of plane leaves or petals, set together in circular rows round the centre. The word Planipetalous is also used in the same sense.

Planimeter (plā-ni-mē't-ēr), n. An instrument for measuring the area of any plane figure laid down on paper, so contrived that, when the tracer has described the outline of the figure, the area is indicated by the index. Called also Platometer.

Planimetric, Planimetrical (plā-ni-mē't-rik, plā-ni-mē't-rik-al), a. Pertaining to planimetry or the mensuration of plane surfaces.

Planimetry (plā-nim'et-ri), n. [L. planus, plain, and Gr. metreo, to measure.] The mensuration of plane surfaces, or that part of geometry which regards lines and plane figures.

Planing-machine, Planing-mill (plān'ing-ma-shēn, plān'ing-mil), n. 1. A machine for planing wood, the usual form of which has cutters on a drum rotating on a horizontal axis over the board which passes beneath. The cutter-drum may be repeated underneath and at the edges, so as to plane top, bottom, and edges simultaneously. —2. A machine-tool for planing metals, in which the metal object to be planed, fixed to a traversing table, is moved against a relatively fixed cutter.

Planipennes, Planipennates (plā-ni-pen'nēz, plā-ni-pen-nā'tēz), n. pl. [L. planus, flat, and penna, a feather, a wing.] A tribe of neuropterous insects, comprehending those which have flat wings, of which the inferior pair almost equal the superior ones, and are simply folded underneath at their anterior margin. The ant-lions and termites are examples of this tribe.

Planipennes—Termes lucifugus (White Ant).

Planipetalous (plā-ni-pet'al-us), a. [L.

planus, flat, and Gr. petalon, a petal.] In bot. having flat petals or leaves; flat-leaved. See PLANIFOLIOLUS.

Planish (plan'ish), v. t. [From plane.] To make smooth or plain, as wood; to condense, smooth, and toughen, as a metallic plate, by light blows of a hammer; to polish; as, to planish silver goods or tin-plate.

Planisher (plan'ish-ēr), n. 1. A thin flat-ended tool used by tinners and braziers for smoothing tin-plate and brass-work. —2. A workman who smooths or planes.

Planisphere (plan'i-sfēr), n. [L. planus, plain, and E. sphere.] 1. A sphere projected on a plane; a map exhibiting the circles of the sphere. —2. A name given to any contrivance in which plane surfaces, moving on one another, fulfil any of the uses of a celestial globe.

Planispheric (plan-i-sfēr'ik), a. Pertaining to a planisphere.

Plank (plangk), n. [Norm. planke, a wooden bridge, Fr. dial. planke, Pr. planca, plancha, Fr. planche, from L. planca (for planica), a board, slab, from L. planus, plain. The D. plank, Sw. plancka, G. and Dan. planke, have the same origin.] 1. A broad piece of sawed timber, differing from a board only in being thicker. The name is given generally to all timber, except fir, which is less than 4 inches thick and thicker than 1½ inch. Gwilt. 'Trust not to rotten planks.' Shak. 2.† Something resembling a plank; a slab.

Over his grave was soon after erected . . . a monument of freestone, with a plank of marble thereon.
Wood.

3. Fig. any one principle or article of a political or other platform.

Their declaration of principles—their 'platform,' to use the appropriate term—was settled and published to the world. Its distinctive elements or 'planks' are financial.
Times newspaper.

—To walk the plank, a mode of drowning practised by pirates by causing their victims to walk along a plank laid across the bulwarks of a ship till they overbalance it and fall into the sea.

Plank (plangk), v. t. 1. To cover or lay with planks; as, to plank a floor or a ship. —2. To lay down, as on a plank; to table: generally applied to money. 'Why, says he, shell out, and plank down a pile of dollars.' Haliburton. [United States.]

Plank-road (plangk'rōd), n. A road formed of planks laid transversely, much used in America.

Plank-sheer (plangk'shēr), n. Naut. the gunwale or covering board; a plank round the ship which covers and secures the timber-heads.

Planky (plangk'i), a. Constructed of planks. 'Before the planky gates.' Chapman.

Planless (plan'les), a. Having no plan. 'Every planless measure.' Coleridge.

Planner (plan'ēr), n. One who plans or forms a plan; a projector.

Plano-concave (plā-nō-kon'kāv), a. Plane on one side and concave on the other; as, a plano-concave lens. See LENS.

Plano-conical (plā-nō-kon'ik-al), a. Plane or flat on one side and conical on the other.

Plano-convex (plā-nō-kon'veks), a. Plane or flat on one side and convex on the other; as, a plano-convex lens.

Plano-horizontal (plā'nō-ho-ri-zon'tal), a. Having a level horizontal surface or position.

Planometer (plā-nō-mē't-ēr), n. [L. planus, plane, and Gr. metron, a measure.] A plane, hard surface used in machine-making as a gauge for plane surfaces.

Plano-orbicular (plā'nō-or-bik'ū-lēr), a. Flat on one side and spherical on the other.

Planorbis (plā-nor'bis), n. [L. planus, flat, and orbis, a circle.] A genus of freshwater shells of a discoidal form, resembling the ammonite, but not chambered. Many species are common in Britain.

Plano-subulate (plā-nō-sub'ū-lāt), a. [See SUBULATE.] Smooth and awl-shaped.

Plant (plant), n. [Fr. plante, a plant, the sole of the foot, from L. planta, a plant, a twig, a slip, a cutting, a scion, the sole of the foot. The last is supposed to have been the original meaning, whence that of something stuck or set in the ground; from root of planus, plain.] 1. One of the organisms which form the vegetable kingdom; a vegetable; an organized living body, destitute of sensation

ch, chain; ch, Sc. loch; g, go; j, job;

h, Fr. ton; ng, sing; TH, then; th, thin;

w, wig; wh, whig; zh, azure.—See KEY.

and spontaneous motion, deriving its sustenance from the inorganic world, generally adhering to another body, and drawing from it some of its nourishment, and having the power of propagating itself by seeds or similar reproductive bodies. Some aquatic plants grow without being attached to any fixed body, and a few plants resemble animals in being capable of assimilating animal (and therefore organic) food. Some of the lower plants seem so nearly allied to some of the least highly developed animals that it is difficult to say where the series of plants ends and that of animals begins. (See extract below.) The principal organs of nutrition in plants are the roots and leaves, the former deriving nutriment from the soil, the latter from the atmosphere. By means of proper vessels the nourishing juices are distributed to every part of the plant. Solid matter cannot be directly imbibed by plants, it must first be dissolved in water or in a gaseous form. Carbonic acid is an important article of their nutriment, being absorbed from the air by the leaves, after which it is decomposed within the plant by the influence of sunlight, the carbon going to form vegetable substances, while the oxygen is exhaled into the air. The reproductive organs are those of which the flower is made up (see FLOWER), and the result of the functions which they perform is the fruit and seeds, which, under favourable circumstances, become developed into new individuals. The woody or dicotyledonous plants or exogens consist of three parts—the bark or exterior coat, which covers the wood; the wood, which is hard, and constitutes the principal part; and the pith or centre of the stem. In monocotyledonous plants or endogens the ligneous or fibrous parts and the pithy or parenchymatous are equally distributed through the whole internal substance; and in such acotyledonous plants as fungi, seaweeds, &c., the substance is altogether parenchymatous. In its most general sense plant comprehends all vegetables, trees, shrubs, herbs, grasses, &c. Popularly the word is generally applied to the smaller species of vegetables.

What are the characters which induce us to place any given organism in either the animal or vegetable kingdom? What, in short, are the differences between animals and plants? . . . Whilst all the preceding points have failed to yield a means of invariably separating animals from plants, a distinction which holds good without exception is to be found in the nature of the food taken respectively by each and in the results of the conversion of the same. . . . As a broad rule, all plants are endowed with the power of converting inorganic into organic matter. The food of plants consists of the inorganic compounds, carbonic acid, ammonia, and water, along with small quantities of certain mineral salts. From these, and from these only, plants are capable of elaborating the proteinaceous matter or protoplasm which constitutes the physical basis of life. Plants, therefore, take as food very simple bodies, and manufacture them into much more complex substances. On the other hand, no known animal possesses the power of converting inorganic compounds into organic matter, but all, mediately or immediately, are dependent in this respect upon plants. All animals, as far as is certainly known, require ready-made proteinaceous matter for the maintenance of existence, and this they can only obtain in the first instance from plants. Animals, in fact, differ from plants in requiring as food complex organic bodies, which they ultimately reduce to very much simpler inorganic bodies. The nutrition of animals is a process of oxidation or burning, and consists essentially in the conversion of the energy of the food into vital work, this conversion being effected by the passage of the food into living tissue. Plants, therefore, are the great manufacturers in nature, animals are the great consumers. Just, however, as this law does not invariably hold good for plants, certain fungi being in this respect animals; so it is not impossible that a limited exception to the universality of the law will be found in the case of animals also. H. A. Nicholson.

2. A young tree; a sapling; hence, a stick or staff.

There is a man hants the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving 'Rosalind' on their barks. Shak.

Take a plant of stubborn oak, And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryden.

3. The sole of the foot. B. Jonson.—4. The fixtures, machinery, tools, apparatus, &c., necessary to carry on any trade or mechanical business. The locomotives, carriages, vans, trucks, &c., constitute the plant of a railway. 5. A trick; dodge; swindle; artifice. [Slang.]

It wasn't a bad plant, that of mine, on Fikey, the man accused of forging the Sou'-Western Railway debentures. Dickens.

Plant (plant), v. t. 1. To put in the ground and cover, as seed for growth.—2. To set in the ground for growth, as a young tree or a vegetable with roots.—3. To furnish with plants; to fill and adorn with something planted; to lay out and prepare with plants; as, to plant a garden or an orchard.—4. To engender; to set the germ of anything that may increase. 'It engenders choler, planteth anger.' Shak.—5. To set upright; to set firmly; to fix. 'His standard planted on Laurentum's towers.' Dryden.

He plants his footsteps in the sea, And rides upon the storm. Cowper.

6. To set and direct or point; as, to plant cannon against a fort.—7. To furnish the first inhabitants of; to settle; as, to plant a colony.—8. To introduce and establish; as, to plant Christianity among the heathen. Plant (plant), v. i. To perform the act of planting.

I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase. 1 Cor. iii. 6.

Plantable (plant'a-bl), a. Capable of being planted.

Plant-a-cruive, Planta-crew (plant'a-krov, plant'a-kro), n. [Probably from Fr. plant, a plantation or bed, a, to, and cruive, growth.] A small inclosure for the purpose of raising colewort plants, &c. [Scotch.]

I till a piece of my best ground; down comes a sturdy beggar that wants a kail-yard, or a plant-a-cruive, as you call it, and he claps down an inclosure in the middle of my bit shot of corn, as lightly as if he was bath lard and tenant. Sir W. Scott.

Plantage (plant'aj), n. Plants generally; or an herb, probably Plantago major.

As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shak.

Plantaginæ, Plantaginaceæ (plan-tajin'ë-ë, plan-taj'ji-nä''së-ë), n. pl. [L. plantago, a plantain.] A small nat. order of plants belonging to the monopetalous exogenous series. It consists of herbaceous, rarely suffrutescent, plants, with alternate or radical, rarely opposite, leaves, and inconspicuous flowers on scapes arising from the lower leaves. The common rib-grass, or Plantago lanceolata, may be taken as a type. The herbage is slightly bitter and astringent, and the seeds are covered with mucus, which is occasionally used in the stiffening of linen by the manufacturers.

Plantago (plan-ta'gō), n. [L., from planta, the sole of the foot, from a vague resemblance of the leaves to the foot.] A genus o. plants. See PLANTAIN, a genus of herbs. Plantain (plan'tān), n. [Fr. plantain, from L. plantago (which see).] Plantago, nat. order Plantaginaceæ, a rather large genus of perennial or annual herbs, found in all temperate regions, and represented in Britain by five species, of which the most common is P. lanceolata, or rib-grass. The leaves of the greater plantain and hoary plantain (P. major and media) are by country people frequently applied to fresh wounds. The water-plantain is Alisma Plantago.

These poor slight sores Need not a plantain. Beau. & Fl.

Plantain, Plantain-tree (plan'tān, plan'

Plantain-tree (Musa paradisiaca).

tān-tré), n. [Sp. platano.] A name frequently applied to Musa paradisiaca, now cultivated in all tropical climates. The stem is soft, herbaceous, 15 or 20 feet high, with leaves often more than 6 feet long and nearly 2 broad. The fruit grows in clusters, is about 1 inch in diameter and 8 or 9 inches long. When ripe it is filled with a pulp of a luscious sweet taste. It is one of the most useful fruits in the vegetable kingdom, and forms the entire sustenance of many of the inhabitants of tropical climates.

Plantain-eater (plan'tān-ët-ër), n. A scanorial bird of the genus Musophaga, nearly allied to the Inessores or perchers, found in Africa, and so called from plantains forming their principal food. The base of the bill is enormously dilated, so as to spread like a casque or helmet over the forehead of the head as far as the crown, where its thickened sides form a semicircle. The M. violacea, or violet plantain-eater, of the Gold Coast and Senegal is a very magnificent bird.

Plantal† (plan'tal), a. Belonging to plants. 'Plantal germinations.' Glanville.

Plantar (plan'tar), a. [L. planta, the sole of the foot.] In anat. relating or belonging to the sole of the foot; as, the plantar arch; the plantar muscle. Dunghison.

Plantaris (plan-ta'ris), n. [See above.] A muscle of the foot which serves to extend it.

Plantation (plan-tā'shon), n. [L. plantatio, from planto, to plant.] 1. The act of planting or setting in the earth for growth.—2. The place planted; a small wood; a grove; a piece of ground planted with trees or shrubs for the purpose of producing timber or coppice wood.

As swine are to gardens and orderly plantations so are tumults to parliaments. Eikon Basilike.

3. An estate or tract of land in the southern states of North America, the West Indies, &c., cultivated chiefly by negroes or other non-European labourers, who live in a distinct community on the estate, under the control of the proprietor or master.—4. An original settlement in a new country; a colony.—5. A first planting; introduction; establishment. 'The first plantation of Christianity in this island.' Eikon Basilike.

Plant-cane (plan'tān), n. The original plants of the sugar-cane, produced from germs placed in the ground; or canes of the first growth, in distinction from the ratoons, or sprouts from the roots of canes which have been cut. [West Indies.]

Plant-cutter (plant/kut-ër), n. A bird of the sub-family Phytotominae, so called from their habit of seizing the plants on which they feed, and nipping their stems asunder with their sharp bills. The Chilean plant-cutter (Phytotoma rara) is about the size of a thrush, and is most destructive to crops.

Plant-eating (plant'ët-ing), n. Subsisting on plants; phytophagous.

Planted (plant'ed), pp. In joinery, a term applied to a projecting member wrought on a separate piece of stuff, and afterwards fixed in its place; as, a planted moulding.

Planter (plan'tër), n. 1. One that plants, sets, introduces, or establishes; as, a planter of maize; a planter of vines; the planters of a colony.—2. One who owns a plantation; used especially in the West Indies and southern states of America.—3. One that introduces and establishes; a disseminator. 'The sermons of the first planters of Christianity.' Addison.—4. A person engaged in the fishing trade. [Newfoundland.]—5. A piece of timber or the naked trunk of a tree, one end of which is firmly planted in the bed of a river while the other rises near the surface of the water, a dangerous obstruction to vessels navigating the rivers of the western United States. Bartlett.

Plantership (plan'tër-ship), n. The business of a planter, or the management of a plantation, as in the United States or West Indies.

Planticle (plan'ti-kli), n. A young plant, or plant in embryo. Darwin.

Plantigrada (plan'ti-grā-da), n. pl. [L. planta, the sole of the foot, and gradior, to walk.] A section of carnivorous animals in which the whole, or nearly the whole, of the sole of the foot is applied to the ground in walking. It includes the bears, racoons, badgers, &c.

Plantigrade (plan'ti-grād), n. A carnivorous animal of the section Plantigrada.

Plantigrade (plan'ti-grād), a. Walking on the sole of the foot.

Planting (plant'ing), n. 1. The art of forming plantations of trees; also, the act or art of inserting plants in the soil.—2. Something planted; a plantation. Is. lxi. 3.—8. In arch. the laying of the first courses of stone in a foundation.

Plantless (plant'les), a. Without plants; destitute of vegetation. Edin. Rev.

Plantlet (plant'let), n. A little undeveloped or rudimentary plant.

Plant-louse (plant'lous), n. A name common to the various species of the genus Aphis. See APHIS.

Plantocracy (plan-tok'ra-si), n. [E. plant, and Gr. kratoō, to rule.] 1. Government by planters.—2. Planters collectively. Eclectic Rev. [Rare.]

Plantule (plant'ül), n. [Fr. plantule, dim. of plante, a plant.] The embryo of a plant.

Planula (plan'ü-la), n. [L. planus, flat.] In zool. the oval ciliated free-swimming embryo of certain of the Hydrozoa.

Plankty (plank'ti), n. An Irish or Welsh melody for the harp, often, but not always, of a mournful character.

Plaqué (pläk'), n. [Fr.] 1. An ornamental plate; a brooch; the plate of a clasp.

In front of his turban there was a plaque of diamonds and emeralds. W. H. Russell.

2. In the fine arts, a flat plate of metal upon which enamels are painted; hence, applied to the small enamels themselves done at Limoges in the fifteenth century.

Plash (plash), n. [D. plansch, plias, a puddle. The word seems to be from a verb imitative of a splashing or plashing sound; comp. D. plassen, G. platschen, platschern, to piddle in water; L.G. plasken, E. to splash.] 1. A small collection of standing water; a puddle; a pond.

He leaves
A shallow plash to plunge him in the deep. Shak.

2. A splash. Sir W. Scott.

Plash (plash), v.t. To dabble in water; to fall with a dabbling sound; to splash.

My lance
Plashing among bedded pebbles, stuck
In the middle of a brook. Keats.

Plash (plash), v.t. 1. To make a splashing noise in.—2. To sprinkle with colouring matter so as to produce an imitation of granite; as, to plash a wall.

Plash (plash), v.t. [O. Fr. plaissier, plassier, plessier, from L. plexus, pp. of plecto, to weave, to twist. Plash is a collateral form.] To bend down and interweave the branches or twigs of; as, to plash a hedge. 'The hedge to plash.' Hood. See PLASHING.

For nature loath, so rare a jewel's wrack,
Seem'd 'as she here and there had plash'd a tree,
If possible to hinder destiny. W. Browne.

Plash (plash), n. The branch of a tree partly cut or lopped, bent down, and bound to other branches.

Plashet (plash'et), n. [Dim. of plash.] A small pond or puddle.

Plashing (plash'ing), n. A mode of repairing or modifying a hedge, by bending down a portion of the shoots, cutting them half through near the ground, to render them more pliable, and twisting them among the upright stems, so as to render the whole effective as a fence, and at the same time preserve all the branches alive.

Plashoot (plash'öt), n. A fence made of branches of trees interwoven.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every hedge serveth for a road, and every plashoot for springles to catch them. Cavens.

Flash-wheel (flash'whél), n. Same as Dash-wheel (which see).

Plashy (plash'i), a. 1. Watery; abounding with puddles. 2. Unsound and plashy fens. Milton.—3. Specked as if plashed or splashed with colouring liquid. Keats.

Plasm (plazm), n. [Gr. plasma, form, from plasso, to form.] 1. A mould or matrix in which anything is cast or formed to a particular shape. [Rare.]—2. In biol. plasma (which see).

Plasma (plaz'ma), n. [Gr. plasma, something formed or moulded, from plasso, to form, whence plastic.] 1. A siliceous mineral of a colour between grass-green and leek-green, occurring in angular pieces in beds, associated with common chalcidony. Many fine engraved ornaments of this stone have been found among the ruins of Rome.—2. Formless elementary matter; specifically, in biol. the simplest form of organized matter in the vegetable and animal body, out of which the several tissues are formed; more specifically, in mammals, the nearly colourless fluid in which the corpuscles of the blood are suspended.

A great portion of his compositions is not poetry, but only the plasma of poetry. Landor.

Plasmatic, Plasmatical (plaz-maf'ik, plaz-maf'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to plasma; having the character of a plasma.—2.† Giving shape; having the power of giving form; plastic. 'Working in this by her (Psyche's) plasmatical spirits, all the whole world into order and shape.' Dr. H. More.

Plasmodium (plaz-mó'di-um), n. [From consisting of protoplasm.] A form which certain fungous plants assume at one stage of development. See MYXOMYCETÆ.

Plasmogony (plaz-mog'o-ni), n. [Gr. plasma, form, and gonē, origin or generation.] The generation of an organism from a plasma or organic formative fluid. Rosseter.

Plaster (plas'tér), n. [O. Fr. plâtre (Fr. plâtre), from L. emplastrum, Gr. emplastron, plaster, from emplasso, to daub over—en, on, in, and plasso, to form, to mould, to shape.] 1. (a) A composition of lime, water, and sand, with or without hair for binding, well mixed into a kind of paste, and used for coating walls and partitions of houses. (b) Calcined gypsum or sulphate of lime, used, when mixed with water, for finishing walls, for moulds, ornaments, casts, luting, cement, &c.—2. In phar. an external application of a harder consistence than an ointment, to be spread according to different circumstances, either on linen, silk, or leather. Plasters are composed of unctuous substances, united either to powders or metallic oxides, &c. They owe their consistence either to metallic oxides, especially those of lead, or to wax, resin, &c.—Plaster of Paris, a composition of several species of gypsum, originally obtained from Montmartre near Paris, used in building and in casting busts and statues. Popularly, this name is applied to plaster-stone, or to any species of gypsum. The plaster-stone is found in many parts of England, and is calcined into the plaster used by the modeller, plasterer, &c. When diluted with water into a thin paste plaster of Paris sets rapidly, and at the instant of setting expands or increases in bulk; hence this material becomes valuable for filling cavities, &c., when other earths would shrink. See GYP-SUM.—Plaster cast, a copy of an object obtained by pouring plaster of Paris mixed with water into a mould which forms a copy of the object in reverse.

Plaster (plas'tér), v.t. 1. To overlay or cover with plaster, as the partitions of a house, walls, &c.—2. To cover with a plaster, as a wound.—3. To lay coarsely on; to bedaub; as, she plasters her face with paint. [Colloq.]

Plasterer (plas'tér-ér), n. 1. One that overlays with plaster.—2. One that makes figures in plaster.

Plastering (plas'tér-ing), n. 1. The act or operation of overlaying with plaster.—2. The plaster-work of a building; a covering of plaster.

Plaster-stone (plas'tér-stón), n. Gypsum or a species of gypsum (which see).

Plastery (plas'tér-i), a. Resembling plaster; containing plaster.

St. Peter's disappoints me: the stone of which it is made is a poor plastery material; and indeed Rome in general might be called a rubbishy place. A. H. Clough.

Plastic (plas'tik), a. [Gr. plastikos, from plasso, to form.] 1. Having the power to give form or fashion to a mass of matter. 'Plastic Nature working to this end.' Pope.

Benign Creator, let thy plastic hand
Dispose its own effect. Prior.

2. Capable of being modelled or moulded into various forms, as plaster, clay, &c., are plastic materials; hence capable of change or modification; capable of receiving a new bent or direction; as, in youth the mind is more plastic than in mature age.—3. Pertaining, relating, appropriate to, or characteristic of modelling or moulding; produced by, or appearing to be produced by, moulding or modelling; said of sculpture and the kindred arts, as distinguished from painting and the graphic arts. 'These antique forms in which Greek plastic art embodies its ideal of the divine.' Dr. Caird.

—Plastic clay, in geol. a name given to one of the beds of the eocene period, from its being used in the manufacture of pottery. It is a marine deposit, and is found in the lower eocene of England and France.—Plastic operations, plastic surgery, operations which have for their object to restore lost parts, as when the skin of the cheeks is used to make a new nose (rhinoplastic), and the like.

Plasticity (plas'tik-al), a. Same as Plastic.

Plasticity (plas'tis'i-ti), n. 1. The state or quality of being plastic: (a) the quality of giving form or shape to matter. (b) Capability of being moulded, formed, or modelled.

2. Plastic force or power. Dunglison.

Plastography (plas-tog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. plastographia, forgery, from plastos, formed, moulded, and grapho, to write.] 1. Imitation of hand-writing; forgery.—2. The art of forming figures in plaster.

Plastron (plas'tron), n. [Fr. plastron, a breastplate. See PLASTER.] 1. A piece of leather stuffed, used by fencers to defend the breast against pushes.—2. In zool. the lower or ventral portion of the bony case of the chelonians (tortoises and turtles).

Plastron-de-fer (plas-tron-de-fer), n. [Fr.] In anc. armour, an iron plate worn beneath the ringed hauberk, for the purpose of additional protection.

Plat (plat), v.t. pret. and pp. platted; ppr. plattling. [Same as plast (which see).] To interweave; to plait.

When they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head. Mat. xxvii. 29.

Plat (plat), n. Work done by plaiting or interweaving.

Plat (plat), n. [Same word as plot; but probably affected by Fr. plat, plate, flat (from the German). See PLATE.] 1. A small piece of ground marked out and devoted to some special purpose; a plot of ground.

I keep smooth plate of fruitful ground,
Where thou may'st warble, eat, and dwell. Tennyson.

2. In mining, a piece of ground cut out about a shaft, after it is sunk to a certain depth, for containing ore or leads.—3. A large flat stone used as the landing-place of a stair. [Scotch.]

Plat (plat), n. [Fr. plat, flat; comp. plan, from L. planus, plain.] A plan; a design; a map; a chart. 'To be workmanly wrought, according to the plat thereof.' Agreement, temp. Henry VIII., quoted by Richardson. 'To note all the islands and to set them down in plat.' Hackluyt.

Plat (plat), a. Plain; flat; level.

Plat (plat), adv. 1. Plainly; flatly; downright.—2. Smoothly; evenly.

Plata-azul (plá'ta-a-thúl'), n. [Sp., azure silver.] The Mexican name for a rich ore of silver.

Platalea (plá'tá'le-a), n. [L., the spoonbill.] The spoonbill genus, a genus of gallinaceous birds closely resembling the storks, but with the bill flattened out so as to form a broad spoon-like curve. The common spoon-bill (Platalea leucorodia), though rare in Britain, is common on the Continent.

Platan, Platane (plát'an, plát'an), n. [L. platanus.] The plane-tree (which see).

I espied thee, fair indeed and tall,
Under a platane. Milton.

Often, where clear-stemmed platans guard
The outlet, did I turn away. Tennyson.

Platanaceæ (plá'ta-ná'se-è), n. pl. [L. platanus, Gr. platanos, the plane-tree, from platys, broad, in allusion to its broad, flat leaves.] A natural order of exogenous plants, known by their round heads of monœcious flowers, their one-celled ovary, containing one ovule, and the embryo lying in fleshy albumen. The leaves are alternate, with sheathing stipules opposite to the leaves. This order consists of the single genus Platanus (see PLANE-TREE), containing noble timber-trees, natives of Barbary, the Levant, and North America.

Platanista (plá'ta-nis'ta), n. [L.] A genus of cetaceans, family Delphinidae, differing from the true dolphins in that it inhabits fresh water, and in its blow-hole being a longitudinal fissure instead of transverse. P. gangetica, the platanista of Pliny, is the type of the genus, which was formerly included under Delphinus.

Platanus (plá'tá'nus), n. A genus of plants. See PLANE-TREE and PLATANACEÆ.

Plata-verde (plá'ta-ver'dá), n. [Sp., green silver.] A native bromide of silver found in Mexico.

Platband (plat'band), n. [Fr. plate-bande—plat, plate, flat, and bande, a band.] 1. A border of flowers in a garden, along a wall, or the side of a parterre.—2. In arch. (a) any flat rectangular moulding, the projection of which is much less than its width; a fascia. (b) A lintel formed with voussiors in the manner of an arch, but with the intrados horizontal. (c) The fillets between the flutes of the Ionic and Corinthian pillars.

Plate (plát), n. [From O. Fr. plate, a metal plate, a piece of plate-armour, and plat, a dish; plat, plate, flat; a word whose history is doubtful; comp. D. and Dan. plat, Sw. and G. platt, flat; perhaps (like place) from Gr. platys, broad; cog. with Skr. prithu, broad; from a root signifying to be extended.] 1. A piece of metal, flattened or extended to an even surface with a uniform thickness. — 2. Armour of plate, composed of broad pieces, and thus distinguished from mail. 'Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail.' Milton. 'Squares of men in brazen plates.' Tennyson. — 3. Domestic vessels, utensils, or instruments, as flagons, dishes, cups, spoons, knives and forks, &c., made of gold or silver; also, an article or articles of gold or silver given to the winner in a contest, especially to the owner of the winning horse in a race. At your dessert bright pewter comes too late, When your first course was all served up in plate. King.

4. A small shallow vessel of metal, porcelain, or earthenware, from which food is eaten at table. — 5. A beam or piece of timber laid horizontally in a wall to receive the ends of other timbers. The plate for roof timbers, and also for joists, is called a wall plate. — 6. A piece of metal, as copper or steel, on which anything is engraved for the purpose of being printed off on paper, &c.; hence, the printed representation or impression from an engraved plate; as, a book illustrated with plates. — 7. A page of stereotype, or fixed metallic types, for printing. — 8. In her, a roundel tintured argent. — 9. † A piece of silver money.

Belike he has some new trick for a purse; And if he has, he's worth three hundred plates. Marlowe.

10. In mining, a term for compact beds of shale, which, when exposed to the weather, break up into thin plates or laminae. [North of England.]

Plate (plát), v.t. pret. & pp. plated; ppr. plating. 1. To cover, furnish, or adorn with a plate or plates; especially, to overlay with a thin coating of silver or other metal, either by a mechanical process, as hammering, or by a chemical process, as electrotyping; used particularly of silver; as, plated vessels. 2. To arm with plate-armour for defence. 'Plated in habiliments of war.' Shak. — 3. To beat into thin flat pieces or laminae.

Plate-armour (plát'ár-mér), n. Defensive armour consisting of plates of metal.

Plateau (plá-tó), n. pl. Plateaux, Plateaus (plá-tóz). [Fr.] 1. A broad, flat area of land in an elevated position; a tableland; an elevated plain. — 2. A large ornamental dish for the centre of a table.

Plate-basket (plát'bas-ket), n. 1. A basket lined with tin for removing plates which have been used from a dinner-table. — 2. A small basket lined with baize for holding knives, forks, and spoons. Simmonds.

Plate-carrier (plát'kar-i-ér), n. 1. A kind of tray on which servants bring plates to table. — 2. A contrivance in hotels and eating-houses, consisting of a case with a number of shelves, which can be raised and lowered so as to take up and bring down plates from and to the kitchens.

Plateful (plát'fúl), n. As much as a plate will hold.

Plate-girder (plát'gér-dér), n. A girder formed of a single plate of metal, or of a series of plates joined together.

Plate-glass (plát'glas), n. A superior kind of thick glass used for mirrors, and also for large panes in windows, shop fronts, &c. It contains about 78 per cent of silica, potash 2, soda 13, lime 5, and alumina 2.

Plate-holder (plát'hóld-ér), n. In photog. that part of a camera which is used to contain and transport the sensitized plate; the slide.

Plate-iron (plát'í-érn), n. Iron drawn into flat plates by being passed between cylindrical rollers; rolled iron.

Platel (plát'tel), n. A small dish. Simmonds.

Plate-layer (plát'lá-ér), n. In rail, a workman whose occupation is to lay down rails and fix them to the sleepers.

Plate-leather (plát'levi-ér), n. Chamois leather used for cleaning gold or silver plate.

Plate-mark (plát'márk), n. A legal mark or symbol made on certain gold and silver articles for the purpose of indicating their degree of purity, &c. These symbols are—(1) The maker's initials. (2) The standard mark, the English mark for gold being a crown and figures indicating the number of carats fine, or the number alone. Instead of the crown there are in Ireland, a harp crowned; in Glasgow, a lion-rampant; and in Edinburgh, a thistle. (3) The hall-mark of the district assay office. These offices are at London, Chester, Birmingham, Sheffield, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dublin. There is a leopard's head for London, an anchor for Birmingham, a castle for Edinburgh, and so on. (4) The date-mark, consisting of a letter which is changed every year. (5) The duty-mark, consisting of the head of the sovereign (not now required).

Plate-metal (plát'met-al), n. A trade name for white cast-iron.

Platen (plát'en), n. [From plat, flat.] In printing, the flat part of a press by which the impression is made.

Plate-paper (plát'pá-pér), n. A heavy, spongy paper used for taking impressions from engraved plates.

Plate-powder (plát'pou-dér), n. A composition for cleaning gold and silver plate: called also Rouge-powder. The most common powder is made by triturating one part of rouge with three parts of prepared chalk.

Plate-printer (plát'print-ér), n. A workman who produces impressions from engraved plates.

Plate-printing (plát'print-ing), n. The act or process of printing from an engraved plate.

Plater (plát'ér), n. 1. One who coats articles with gold or silver. — 2. A horse that competes for a plate. Lever.

Plate-rack (plát'rak), n. A frame in a scullery, kitchen, or pantry for the reception of dinner plates and dishes after washing.

Plate-railway (plát'rál-wá), n. A tramway in which the wheel-tracks are flat plates.

Plateresque (plát-ér-esk'), n. and a. [Sp. plateresco, from plata, silver.] A term to describe architectural enrichments resembling silver work. Ford.

Plate-roller (plát'ról-ér), n. A smooth roller for making sheet or plate iron.

Plate-shears (plát'shêrz), n. pl. A machine for cutting or shearing sheet or plate metal, such as boiler plate.

Platessa (plát-es'sá), n. [L.] A name given by some naturalists to the genus of fishes which includes the plaice.

Plate-tracery (plát-trá'sér-i), n. In arch. the earliest form of tracery, used at the beginning of Early English architecture, in which the openings are formed or cut in the stonework, and have no projecting mouldings.

Plate-warmer (plát'wärm-ér), n. A case with shelves, or other apparatus, in which plates are warmed before the fire.

Plate-wheel (plát'whél), n. A wheel without arms or spokes; a wheel in which the rim and nave are connected by a plate or web.

Platey, Platy (plát'ti), a. Like a plate; flat. Platform (plát'form), n. [Plat, flat, and form; Fr. plate-forme.] 1. † The sketch of anything horizontally delineated; the ichnography. Sandys. — 2. † A place laid out after any model. Pope. — 3. Any flat or horizontal structure, especially if raised above some particular level; as, (a) the flat roof of a building on the outside. (b) The place where guns are mounted on a fortress or battery. (c) Naut. the orlop (which see). (d) The raised walk at a railway station for landing passengers and goods. (e) A place raised above the floor of a hall set apart for the speakers at public meetings.

The easiest means of gaining a public character in Britain is that presented by the platform. Times newspaper.

Not to speak of the host of smaller men whose poor thoughts clothe themselves on the platform, and through the press, in poorer words, no one can read the speeches of even our greatest statesmen . . . without being constrained to admit that, in comparison with the great orators and authors of the past, we have fallen on degenerate times. Dr. Caird.

4. The aggregate of principles expressly adopted or avowed by any body of men, such as a political party; a declared system of policy; as, a political platform; the Democratic or Republican platform.

Their minds and affections were universally bent even against all the orders and laws wherein the church is founded, conformable to the platform of Geneva. Ep. Hooker.

Hence—5. Opinions or principles generally. Lever.

Platform-car (plát'form-kär), n. An open railway car or wagon having no inclosing sides or merely surrounded by low ledges, intended for carrying stones, pig-iron, and the like.

Platform-scales (plát'form-skälz), n. pl. A weighing machine or balance with a flat scale on which the object to be weighed is placed.

Platic (plát'ik), a. In astrol. pertaining to or in the position of a ray cast from one planet to another, not exactly, but within the orbit of its own light. Baileys.

Platin (plát'in), n. [Same as platen.] The seat of a machine tool on which the work is secured.

Platina (plát'i-na), n. [Sp. platina, from plata, silver. See PLATE.] 1. The old name of platinum. See PLATINUM. — 2. Twisted silver-wire. — 3. An iron plate for glazing stuff.

Plating (plát'ing), n. 1. The art or operation of covering articles with a thin coating of metal, especially of overlaying articles made of the baser metals with a thin coating of gold or silver. It is effected in various ways; sometimes the gold or silver is attached to and rolled out with the other metal by pressure; sometimes the one metal is precipitated from its solution upon the other, electro-chemical decomposition being now much employed for this purpose. See ELECTROTYPE. — 2. A thin coating of one metal laid upon another metal.

Platinic (plá-tin'ik), a. In chem. of or pertaining to platinum.

Platiniferous (plá-ti-ní-fér-us), a. [Platinum, and L. fero, to produce.] Producing platinum; as, platiniferous sand.

Platinize (plát'in-íz), v.t. To combine with platinum; to cover with platinum.

Platinode (plát'in-ód), n. The cathode or negative pole of a galvanic battery.

Platinoid (plát'in-oid), n. [Platinum, and Gr. eidos, likeness.] A name given to a family of metals with which platinum is invariably found associated. The platinoids are palladium, rhodium, iridium, osmium, and ruthenium.

Platinous (plát'in-us), a. Containing or consisting of platinum.

Platinum (plát'in-um), n. [See PLATINA.] Sym. Pt. At. wt. 197.4. A metal discovered in 1741 in the mines of Choco in Peru. It occurs only in the metallic state, associated or combined with various other metals, such as copper, iron, lead, titanium, chromium, gold, silver, palladium, rhodium, osmium, ruthenium, and iridium. It is usually in the form of rounded or flattened grains of a metallic lustre and white colour, mixed with sand and other alluvial depositions. Pure platinum has a white colour very much like silver, but of inferior lustre. It is the heaviest of known metals; its specific gravity, after forging, being about 21.25, and 21.5 in the state of wire. It is exceedingly ductile, malleable, tenacious, and difficult of fusion. It undergoes no change from the combined agency of air and moisture. It may be melted by voltaic electricity, or by the oxyhydrogen blow-pipe. Like iron it admits of being welded at a high temperature. It is not acted upon by any of the pure acids, but is dissolved by chlorine and nitro-muriatic acid, and is oxidized at high temperatures by pure potassa and lithia. It is capable of being hammered into plates of extreme thinness, and Dr. Wollaston succeeded in drawing out a wire of this metal to the fineness of $\frac{1}{1000}$ th of an inch. From the unalterability of platinum at high temperatures, and its power of resisting the action of most chemical agents, it is much used for crucibles, evaporating dishes, and even alembics. It unites with most metals. It forms two series of compounds—platinous, represented by the chloride PtCl_2 , and platinic, represented by the chloride PtCl_4 . One of the most remarkable properties of platinum is its power of causing gases to enter into combination. When a perfectly clean plate of platinum is introduced into a mixture of oxygen and hydrogen, it will cause them to combine so as to form water, and often with such rapidity as to render the metal red hot. Spongy platinum, or the black powder of platinum, is most effective in producing this extraordinary result. A jet of hydrogen directed upon spongy platinum may be inflamed by the metal thus ignited, a property which has been applied to the construction of convenient instruments for procuring light.—Spongy platinum, metallic platinum in the form of a porous, dull, brown mass. It is obtained by heating the ammonio-chloride of platinum.—Platinum black powder, a black powder obtained by decomposing a weak solution of chloride of platinum by the electric current.

Platinum-steel (plati-num-stēl), n. Steel alloyed with about $\frac{1}{10}$ of platinum, a composition said to be not quite so hard as silver-steel, but tougher. E. H. Knight.

Platitude (plati-tūd), n. [Fr.] 1. Flatness; dullness; insipidity; as, there was much platitude in his remarks.—2. A trite, dull, or stupid remark uttered as if it were a novelty or matter of importance; a truism.

What I have said in the nature of platitudes, or of truisms, or of revolutionary maxims, has been said with reference to declarations made by persons of the greatest weight in this House. Gladstone.

Platitudinarian (plati-tūd'i-nā'ri-an), n. One who is given to uttering platitudes; one who makes trite, stale, or insipid remarks.

Platitudinize (plati-tūd'i-niz), v. i. To utter platitudes; to make dull, stale, flat, or insipid remarks.

Platitudinous (plati-tūd'i-nus), a. Relating to or characterized by platitudes or platitudes; stale; trite; flat; dull; insipid.

Platitudinousness (plati-tūd'i-nus-nes), n. The state or quality of being platitudinous; dullness; flatness; staleness; insipidity; triteness.

Platometer (pla-ton'et-ēr), n. [Gr. platys, flat, and metron, a measure.] Same as Planimeter.

Platonic (pla-ton'ik), a. Pertaining to Plato the philosopher, or to his philosophy, his school, or his opinions.—Platonic bodies, the five regular geometrical solids, namely, the tetrahedron, the hexahedron or cube, the octahedron, the dodecahedron, and the icosaedron.—Platonic love, a pure spiritual affection subsisting between the sexes, unmixed with carnal desires, and regarding the mind only and its excellencies; a species of love for which Plato was a warm advocate.—Platonic year, the great year, or a period of time determined by the revolution of the equinoxes, or the space of time in which the stars and constellations return to their former places in respect to the equinoxes. This revolution, which is calculated by the precession of the equinoxes, is accomplished in about 26,000 years.

Platonic (pla-ton'ik), n. A follower of Plato; a Platonist.

Platonical (pla-ton'ik-al), a. Same as Platonic.

Away with these dotages of platonical or anabaptistical communities. Let properties be as they ought, constantly fixed where the laws and civil right have placed them. Ep. Hall.

Platonically (pla-ton'ik-al-ly), adv. In a Platonic manner. Wotton.

Platonism (plā'ton-izm), n. The doctrines, opinions, or philosophy of Plato, consisting of three branches—ethics, physics, and dialectics. According to Grote there is to be found in the writings of Plato no one system to which he adhered consistently through life. G. H. Lewes maintains that he never framed one, and that the structure of the Dialogues of Search and the Dialogues of Exposition is so self-contradictory on all points that no system of philosophy can possibly be detached from them. Brande & Cox.

Platonist (plā'ton-ist), n. One who adheres to the philosophy of Plato; a follower of Plato.

It was an opinion of the Platonists that the souls of men, having contracted in the body great stains and pollutions of vice and ignorance, there were several purgations and cleansings necessary to be passed through both here and hereafter, in order to refine and purify them. Addison.

Platonize (plā'ton-iz), v. i. pret. platonized; ppr. platonizing. To adopt the opinions or philosophy of Plato. Hakewill.

Platonize (plā'ton-iz), v. t. To explain on the principles of the Platonic school, or to accommodate to those principles.

Platonizer (plā-to-niz'ēr), n. One who platonzes; a Platonist.

Philo the Jew, who was a great platonizer, calls the stars divine images, and incorruptible and immortal souls. Dr. A. Young.

Platoon (pla-tōn'), n. [Fr. peloton, a ball of thread, a platoon, from pelote, a ball of thread; L. L. pelota, pilota, from L. pila, a ball.] 1. Formerly, a small square body of soldiers or musketeers, drawn out of a battalion of foot, forming a hollow square to strengthen the angles; or a small body acting together, but separate from the main body.—2. In present usage, two files forming a subdivision of a company.—Platoon firing, firing by subdivisions.

Platte, † a. See PLAT. Chaucer.

Platter (plā'tēr), n. [From plate, O. Fr. platel, a plate, or from a Fr. plattier or plattier, a dish or tray to hold several plats or smaller dishes.] A plate; a large shallow dish for holding eatables.

The attendants bustled to and fro, and speedily brought in several large smoking platters filled with huge pieces of beef, boiled and roasted. Sir W. Scott.

Platter (plā'tēr), n. One who plats or forms by weaving.

Platter-faced (plā'tēr-fāst), a. Having a broad face. Clarke.

Plating (plā'ting), n. Slips of bark, cane, straw, &c., woven or plaited, for making into hats, &c.

Bermuda hats are worn by our ladies; they are made of a sort of mat, or (as they call it) plating made of the palmetto leaf. Berkeley.

Platy (plā'ti), a. Like a plate; consisting of plates.

Platycephalic (plā'ti-sef'al'ik), a. Same as Platycephalous.

Platycephalous (plā'ti-sef'al-us), a. [Gr. platys, broad, and kephalē, head.] Broad-headed; flat-headed.

Platycephalus (plā'ti-sef'al-us), n. A genus of fishes, family Scorpenidae. The head is large, long, very broad, and armed with acute spines.

Platycercus (plā'ti-sēr'kus), n. [Gr. platys, broad, and kerkos, a tail.] A genus of parrots, mostly Australian, which derives its name from the fine, wide tails of the species. The blue-cheeked parakeet (P. Pennanti) of New South Wales is one of the best-known species.

Platycerium (plā'ti-sē'ri-um), n. [Gr. platys, broad, and kērion, a honeycomb.] A very distinct and remarkable genus of ferns commonly associated with the Acrostichee, but which it has been proposed to place in a separate section, from its producing its sori in large amorphous patches, not as in the true Acrostichee universal over the fertile portions. The species are few in number, chiefly Eastern or Australian, and for the most part tropical.

Platycnemid (plā'tik-nem'ik), a. [Gr. platys, broad, and knēmē, a leg.] Broad-legged; an archæological term applied to certain individuals remarkable for the antero-posterior flattening or platycnemism of the shin-bone.

The human remains, which were described by Prof. Busk in the essay on the discoveries published in the Journal of the Ethnological Society, January 1871, presented points of very high interest; for while the skulls were rather above than below the present average cranial capacity, some of the leg-bones were remarkable for the peculiar antero-posterior flattening or platycnemism of the shin-bones. And this flattening was caused by the prolongation of the bone in front of the inter-osseous ridge, and not in any degree by its posterior extension, which is the distinctive feature of the tibia found in the caves of Cro Magnon and of Gibraltar. The fact that these platycnemid leg-bones were associated with others of the ordinary forms, and for the most part belonging to the young, and probably to females, while the skulls were of the same type, proves that the character is not one of race, as M. Broca believed, but rather one peculiar to the individual and perhaps to the sex. W. Boyd Dawkins.

Platycnemism (plā'tik-nē-mizm), n. The peculiarity of having platycnemid shin-bones. See extract under PLATYCNEMIC.

Platycoelium (plā-ti-sē'l-i-an), a. [Gr. platys, broad, and koilos, hollow.] Flat at the front end and concave at the hinder, as the vertebrae of the extinct cetosauri.

Platycrinite (plā'ti-krī'nit), n. An encrinite of the genus Platycrinus.

Platycrinus (plā'ti-krī'nus), n. [Gr. platys, broad, and krinon, a lily.] A genus of fossil encrinites, peculiar to the limestone of the coal-measures, so named from the flatness and breadth of the basal and radial plates of the receptacle.

Platyelmia (plā-ti-el'mi-a), n. pl. [Gr. platys, broad, and helmins, a worm.] A section of annelids, of the class Scolecida, including those which possess a more or less flattened body, usually somewhat ovate in shape, and not exhibiting anything like distinct segmentation. The intestinal canal of the Platyelmia has only a single orifice, and their nervous system is not very distinct. The division includes two parasitic orders—the Tæniada and the Trematoda; and one non-parasitic order, viz. the Turbellaria. A sub-order, however, of this last does not conform to the above definition; but their other characters are such as to forbid their separation.

Platymeter (plā-tim'e-tēr), n. [Gr. platys, broad, and metron, a measure.] An apparatus for measuring the inductive capacity of dielectrics. Rosier.

Platodon (plā'ti'ō-don), n. [Gr. platys, broad, and odon, odontos, a tooth.] A broad-toothed animal.

Platypod (plā'ti-pod), n. [Gr. platys, broad, and pous, podos, a foot.] A broad-footed animal.

Platypus (plā'ti-pus), n. The original scientific name of the ornithorhynchus. See ORNITHORHYNCHUS.

Platyrhina (plā'ti-rī'na), n. pl. [Gr. platys, flat, and rhis, rhinos, a nostril.] Those species of the monkey tribe which have a wide space between the nostrils, or rather the nostrils open on the sides of the nose, and not underneath. The thumbs of the forefeet are either wanting, or, if present, are not opposed to the other digits; and the tail is generally prehensile. They are exclusively confined to South America.

Platyrhine (plā'ti-rīn), n. A monkey belonging to the section Platyrhina.

Platyrhine (plā'ti-rīn), a. Having a broad nose; specifically applied to a section of Quadrumania in which the nostrils are far apart. See PLATYRHINA.

Platysma (plā-tis'ma), n. [Gr. platys, broad.] A broad thin muscle on the side of the neck, immediately under the skin, that assists in drawing the skin of the cheek downwards.

Platysoma (plā-ti-sō'ma), n. A genus of ganoid fishes of the lepidosteoid family, found in the carboniferous and Permian strata.

Platysomes (plā'ti-sōmz), n. pl. [Gr. platys, broad, and sōma, the body.] A family of coleopterous insects, comprehending species with a wide and much-depressed body. They occur under the bark of trees.

Platystoma (plā-tis'tō-ma), n. [Gr. platys, broad, and stoma, a mouth.] 1. A genus of fishes of the family Siluridae, characterized by a large mouth, flat depressed snout, and a skin destitute of scales. Some of the species attain a large size, and P. tigrinum of South American rivers, called by the natives caruto, colite, and oronni, is one of the most beautiful and delicious of fresh-water fishes. The Indians take it both by baited hooks and by shooting it with arrows.—2. A name given to a genus of gasteropodous molluscs. P. Suesii occurs fossil in the Hallstadt beds of the upper trias.

Plaudit (plā'dit), n. [L. plaudite, do you applaud, imper. of plaudo, to applaud, whence applause.] Applause; praise bestowed.

The plaudits on which it lives are as welcome when shouted by the most ignoble as when uttered by the wise. I. Taylor.

Plaudite (plā'di'tē), n. Same as Plaudit.

She would so shamefully fall in the last act, that instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. Dr. H. More.

Plauditory (plā'di-to-ri), a. Applauding; commending.

Plausibility (plāz-i-bil'i-ti), n. 1. The state or quality of being plausible; speciousness; superficial appearance of right. 'A Frenchified Scotchman, possessing all the cunning and plausibility of the nation where he was educated.' Scott.—2. \dagger Applause. 'With great admiration and plausibility of the people.' Hackluyt.

Plausible (plaz'i-bl), a. [L. plausibilis, from plaudo. See PLAUDIT.] 1. Capable or worthy of being applauded; praiseworthy; also exhibiting pleasure in or assent to; willing; ready. 'A plausible obedience.' Shak. 'Our plausible assent.' Drant.

This John, Bishop of Constantinople, . . . was a good man, given greatly to aims and fasting, but too much addicted to advance the title of his see; which made a plausible bishop seem to be Antichrist to Gregory the Great. Ep. Hacket.

2. Apparently worthy of praise or assent; apparently right; specious; as, a plausible pretext; a plausible doctrine.

The case is doubtful, and may be disputed with plausible arguments on either side. South.

3. Using specious arguments or discourse; fair-spoken; as, a plausible man.—Plausible, Specious. See SPECIOUS.

Plausibleize (plaz'i-bl-iz), v.t. To render plausible. Fuller.

Plausibleness (plaz'i-bl-nes), n. Same as Plausibility. 'The plausibleness of Arminianism, and the congruity it hath with the principles of corrupt nature.' Ep. Sanderson.

Plausibly (plaz'i-bli), adv. In a plausible manner: (a) with fair show; speciously; in a manner adapted to gain favour or approbation.

They could talk plausibly about what they did not understand. Collier.

(b)[†] With expressions of applause; with acclamation.

The Romans plausibly did give consent To Tarquin's everlasting banishment. Shak.

Plausible (plaz'iv), a. 1. Applauding; manifesting praise.

Let plausible Resignation rise, And banish all complaint. Young.

2.† Plausible. 'Plausible words.' Shak.

Play (plā), v.t. [A. Sax. plegan, plegian, to play, from plega, play, pastime; connections doubtful.] 1. To do something not as a task or for profit, but for amusement; to sport; to frolic.

The people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play. Ex. xxxii. 6.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day, Had he thy reason, would he skip and play! Pope.

Playwright (plā'rit), n. A writer of plays; one who adapts plays for the stage.

Not without reluctance . . . do we name Grillparzer under this head of playwrights, and not under that of dramatists, which he aspires to. Carlyle.

Play-writer (plā'rit-ēr), n. One who writes plays; a dramatist.

Ple,† n. A plea; an argument or pleading. Chaucer.

Plea (plē), n. [O.E. plee, plead, pleid, O.Fr. plai, plaid, plait, a suit, a plea; Fr. plaid, the speech of a pleader; Norm. plait, plaid, plea, proceedings; from L. placitum, an opinion, a determination, from placere, to please.] 1. In law, (a) that which is alleged by a party to an action in support of his demand; in a more limited and technical sense, the answer of the defendant to the plaintiff's declaration and demand. (b) A suit or action; a cause in court. Pleas in this sense are usually divided into those of the crown and common pleas. Pleas of the crown are all suits in the sovereign's name, or in the name of the attorney-general in behalf of the sovereign, for offences committed against the crown and regal dignity, and against the peace, as treason, murder, felony, &c. Common pleas are such suits as are carried on between common persons in civil cases. (c) In Scots law, a short and concise note of the grounds on which the action or defence is to be maintained, without argument.—Plea of panel, in Scotland, the plea of guilty or of not guilty.—2. That which is alleged in support, justification, or defence; an excuse; an apology; an urgent argument; a pleading; as, a plea for rationalism. 'With necessity, the tyrant's plea, excused his devilish deeds.' Milton.

In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
But, being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil? Shak.

When such occasions are,
No plea must serve; 'tis cruelty to spare. Denham.

Pleach (plēch), v.t. [See PLASH, for interweave.] To unite by plaiting or weaving together; to plash; to interweave. 'The pleached bower.' Shak. 'Pleached arms.' Shak.

Plead (plēd), v.i. The conjugation is regular, but the form pled (more rarely plead), for the imperfect and past participle, is to be met with. 'Many great persons that against her pled.' Spenser. 'She pled his cause.' H. Kingsley. [Fr. plaider, to plead, from L.L. placitare, from L. placitum. See PLEA.] 1. To argue in support of a claim, or in defence against the claim of another; to urge reasons for or against; to attempt to persuade one by argument or supplication; as, to plead for the life of a criminal; to plead in his favour; to plead with a judge or with a father.

O that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth for his neighbour! Job xvi. 21.

His virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off. Shak.

2. In law, to present a plea or allegation; to present an answer to the declaration of a plaintiff; to deny the plaintiff's declaration and demand, or to allege facts which show that he ought not to recover in the suit. The plaintiff declares or alleges; the defendant pleads to his declaration. The crown or the state prosecutes an offender, and the offender pleads not guilty or confesses the charge.

Plead (plēd), v.t. 1. To discuss, defend, and attempt to maintain by arguments or reasons offered to the tribunal or person who has the power of determining; to argue; as, to plead a cause before a court or jury.—2. To allege or adduce in proof, support, or vindication; as, the law of nations may be pleaded in favour of the rights of ambassadors.—3. To offer in excuse.

I will neither plead my age nor sickness in excuse of faults. Dryden.

4. To allege and offer in a legal plea or defence, or for repelling a demand in law; as, to plead a statute of limitations.

Pleadable (plēd'ə-bl), a. Capable of being pleaded; capable of being alleged in proof, defence, or vindication; as, a right or privilege pleadable at law.—Pleadable briefs, in Scots law, precepts directed to the sheriffs, who thereupon cite parties, and hear and determine: now obsolete.

Pleader (plēd'ēr), n. One who pleads; specifically, (a) a lawyer who argues in a court of justice. (b) One that forms pleas or pleadings; as, a special pleader. (c) One that offers reasons for or against; one that attempts to maintain by arguments.

So fair a pleader any cause may gain. Dryden.

Pleading (plēd'ing), n. 1. The act of advocating any cause; specifically, the act or practice of advocating clients' causes in courts of law.—2. One of the written statements for parties in suits or actions, containing the subject-matter of a litigant's demand or claim, or of his defence or answer. These pleadings have such special names as declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, sur-rejoinder, rebutter, sur-rebutter &c., which are successively brought forward till the question is brought to issue, that is, to rest on a single point.

Pleadingly (plēd'ing-li), adv. In a pleading manner; by supplication.

Pleasant (plēz'ans), n. [Fr. plaisance. See PLEASE.] 1. Pleasure; gaiety; pleasantries; merriment; delight. 'To take of pleasant each his secret share.' Byron. 'When my passion seeks pleasant in love-signs,' Tennyson.—2. A part of a garden or pleasure-grounds to a mansion shut in and secluded from the more open part by trees, shrubs, and close hedges. 'Suggestive of the pleas- ances of old Elizabethan houses.' Ruskin. [Archaic in both senses.]

Pleasant (plēz'ant), a. [Fr. plaisant. See PLEASE.] 1. Pleasing; agreeable; grateful to the mind or to the senses; as, a pleasant ride; a pleasant voyage; a pleasant view. [This word expresses less than delightful, to the mind, and delicious, to the taste.]

Pleasure (plēzh'ūr), n. [O. Fr. plaisir, pleisir, Mod. Fr. plaisir. (See PLEASE.)] Like leisure, this word has had its final syllable assimilated to other nouns in -ure, L. -ura (fractura, &c.).] 1. The gratification of the senses or of the mind; agreeable sensations or emotions; the excitement, relish, or happiness produced by enjoyment or the expectation of good; enjoyment; delight: opposed to pain.

That pleasure is man's chiefest good—because, indeed, it is the perception of good that is properly pleasure—is an assertion most certainly true, though under the common acceptance of it not only false but odious. For, according to this, pleasure and sensuality pass for terms equivalent, and therefore he that takes it in this sense alters the subject of the discourse. Sensuality is indeed a part, or rather one kind of pleasure, such a one as it is. For pleasure, in general, is the consequent apprehension of a suitable object suitably applied to a rightly disposed faculty, and so must be conversant both about the faculties of the body and of the soul respectively, as being the result of the fruitions belonging to both. South.

There is a pleasure sure
In being mad which none but madmen know. Dryden.

2. Sensual or sexual gratification; vicious indulgence of the appetites.

As night follows day,
Death follows pleasure's footsteps through the world. Young.

Pledge (plēj), n. [Fr. piegie, L.L. plegius, plegium, plivium, plivium, pledge. Origin uncertain.] 1. In law, (a) the transfer of a chattel by a debtor to a creditor in security of a debt. (b) The thing pawned as security for the repayment of money borrowed, or for the performance of some agreement or obligation; a pawn. Pledges are, ordinarily, goods and chattels; but money, debts, negotiable instruments, choses in action, and, indeed, any other valuable thing of a personal nature, such as patent rights and manuscripts, may be delivered in pledge. When the pledge is of such a nature as to produce a profit or income by being used, and is retained by the pledgee until he shall have satisfied his claim out of the profit or income, it is called vivum vadum, a living pledge; a mortuum vadum, or dead pledge, is a mortgage. (See MORTGAGE.) Formerly in England, a surety whom a plaintiff was required to find in order to prosecute an action, was called a pledge. After a time, John Doe and Richard Roe did duty as such pledges, but the statement of formal pledges is now abolished. —2. Anything given or considered as a security for the performance of an act; a guarantee. Thus a man gives his word or makes a promise to another, which is received as a pledge for fulfillment; a candidate for parliamentary honours gives promises or pledges to support certain measures; the mutual affection of husband and wife is a pledge for the faithful performance of the marriage covenant; mutual interest is the best pledge for the performance of treaties. —3. A surety; a hostage.

Command my eldest son, nay, all my sons, As pledges of my fealty and love. Shak.

4. An invitation to drink a health; the drinking of another's health; a health. 'Suppose that you winked at our friends drinking those pledges.' Sir W. Scott. See the verb. —To put in pledge, to pawn. —To hold in pledge, to keep in security. —To take the pledge, a popular method of binding one's self to observe principles of total abstinence from intoxicating drink.

Pledge (plēj), v.t. pret. & pp. pledged; ppr. pledging. 1. To give as a pledge or pawn; to deposit in pawn; to deposit or leave in possession of a person as a security. See the noun. —2. To give as a guarantee or security; to gage; as, to pledge one's word or honour; to pledge one's veracity.

We mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honour. Jefferson.

3. To bind to something by a pledge, promise, or engagement; to engage solemnly; as, to pledge one's self.

Pleiad (plí'ad), *n. pl. Pleiades, Pleiades (plí'adz, plí'a-déz), [Gr. Pleias, from pléō, to sail, because, it is said, the rising of the seven stars indicated the time of safe navigation.] Any one of a cluster of stars, commonly called 'the seven stars', in the neck of the constellation Taurus, only six of which are visible to most eyes, though others can detect seven (or even more). Ancient Greek legends derive their name from the seven daughters of Atlas and the nymph Pleione, fabled to have made away with themselves from grief at the death of their sisters the Hyades, or at the fate of their father Atlas, and to have been afterwards placed as stars in the sky. 'Like the lost Pleiad, seen no more below.' Byron.*

Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? Job xxxviii. 31.

Plentifulness (plen'ti-fūl-nes), n. The state of being plentiful; abundance.

Plenty (plen'ti), n. [O. Fr. plenté, from L. plentia, fulness, abundance, from L. plenus, full, from root of pleo, to fill, which is seen also in Gr. plērēs, pleos, full, (pimp) plēni, to fill; Skr. gurna, to fill, r being changed into t; and also in E. full, fill.] 1. Abundance; copiousness; a full or adequate supply; sufficiency; as, we have plenty of corn for bread; the garrison has plenty of provisions. 'Plenty of corn and wine.' Gen. xxvii. 28. 'Plenty of buyers and but few sellers.' Locke.—2. Abundance of things necessary for man; state in which enough is had and enjoyed. 'Promises Britain peace and plenty.' Shak.

Ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord. Joel ii. 26.

Plenty corrupts the melody That made thee famous once, when young. Tennyson.

[This word is rarely used in the plural: Shakspeare has 'Peace, dear nurse of arts plenties and joyful births.']

Plenty (plen'ti), a. Plentiful; being in abundance.

They seem formed for those countries where shrubs are plenty and water scarce. Goldsmith.

When labourers are plenty, their wages will be low. Franklin.

[The use of this word as an adjective for plentiful is now usually considered inelegant, but it is often used colloquially.]

Plenum (plē'nūm), n. [L.] Fulness of matter in space; that state of things in which every part of space is supposed to be full of matter: in opposition to a vacuum, or a space supposed to be devoid of all matter.

There are objections against a plenum, and there are objections against a vacuum; but one or the other must be true. Johnson.

Pleochroic (plē'o-kro'ik), a. Having the property of pleochroism. Dana.

Pleochroism (plē-ok'ro-izm), n. [Gr. pleion, more, and chroiaō, to colour.] In crystal, the variation of colour in some crystals

Pleochromatic (plē-ok'rō-mat'ik), a. Pleochroic.

Pleochromatism (plē-ok-rō-mat-izm), n. Pleochroism.

Pleochroous (plē-ok'ro-us), a. Pleochroic.

Pleomorphism (plē-ō-mor'fizm), n. [Gr. pleōn, more, and morphē, form.] Same as Polyomorphism.

Pleomorphic (plē-ō-mor'fus), a. Having the quality of pleomorphism.

Pleonasm (plē'o-nazm), n. [Gr. pleonasmos, from pleon, pleion, more; pleos, full, filled. See PLENTY.] Redundancy of words in speaking or writing; the use of more words to express ideas than are necessary. This may be justifiable when we intend to present thoughts with particular perspicuity or force; as, 'I saw it with my own eyes;' 'I heard it with my own ears.'

Pleonaste (plē'o-nast), n. [Gr. pleonastos, abundant, from its four facets sometimes found on each solid angle of the octahedron.] Same as Ceylanite. See SPINEL.

Pleonastic, Pleonastical (plē-o-nas'tik, plē-o-nas'tik-al), a. Pertaining to pleonasm; partaking of pleonasm; redundant.

Pleonastically (plē-o-nas'tik-al-lī), adv. In a pleonastic manner; with redundancy of words.

Plerophory (plē-rof'o-ri), n. [Gr. plērōphoria—plērēs, full, and pheroō, to bear.] Full persuasion or confidence. [Rare.]

Abraham had a plerophory, that what was promised, God was able to perform. Barrow.

Plesance,† n. [Fr. plaisance.] Pleasure. Chaucer.

Plesh† (plesh), n. A plash; a puddle. Spenser.

Plesiomorphism (plē'si-ō-morf'izm), n. [Gr. plēsiōs, near, and morphē, form.] In crystal, a term applied to crystallized substances the forms of which closely resemble each other, but are not absolutely identical.

Plesiomorphous (plē'si-ō-morf'us), a. Nearly alike in form.

Plesiosaur (plē'si-ō-sār), n. An extinct animal belonging to the genus Plesiosaurus.

Plesiosaurus (plē'si-ō-sā'rus), n. [Gr. plēsiōs, near, and sauros, a lizard.] The name of a genus of extinct marine saurians, chiefly remarkable for their length of neck. They occur in the formations from the muschelkalk to the chalk inclusive, but are most common in the lias and Kimmeridge clays. They are nearly allied to the Ichthyosaurus.

Plesiosaurus, partially restored.

saurus. To the head of a lizard the plesiosaurus, says Buckland, united the teeth of a crocodile, a neck of enormous length resembling the body of a serpent, a trunk and tail having the proportions of an ordinary quadruped, the ribs of a chameleon, and the paddles of a whale. Specimens have been found from 10 to 20 feet long. Numerous species have been described, the differences being chiefly peculiarities in the form and structure of the vertebrae.

Plete,† v. t. or i. To plead. Chaucer.

Plethora (plēth'o-ra), n. [Gr. plēthōra, from plēthōs, fulness, and that from plēthō, to be or become full, from pleos, full.] 1. In med. over-fulness of blood; a redundant fulness of the blood-vessels; that condition of the body in which the quantity of blood and its nutritive qualities exceed that standard which is compatible with present or the prospect of continued health.—2. Over-fulness in any respect, mentally, intellectually, or otherwise; superabundance; as, a plethora of wit and imagination.

Plethoretic, Plethoretical (plēth-o-ret'ik, plēth-o-ret'ik-al). The same as Plethoric.

Plethoric (plē-thor'ik), a. Having a full habit of body, or the vessels overcharged with fluids; characterized by plethora in any sense.

At last the nation found, with fruitless skill, Its former strength was but plethoric ill. Goldsmith.

Plethorical (plē-thor'ik-al), a. Same as Plethoric.

Plethorically (plē-thor'ik-al-lī), adv. In a plethoric manner.

Plethory (plēth'ō-ri), n. Same as Plethora.
Plethron, Plethrum (plēth'ron, plēth'rūm), n. [Gr. plethron, a measure.] In ancient Greece, the fundamental land-measure, being the square of 100 feet, that is, 10,000 square feet. It answered nearly to the Roman actus, or half-jugerum. The side of the plethron was taken as a measure of length, with the same name; this was equal to about 101 English feet. It was also introduced into the system of itinerary measures, being one-sixth of the stadium (which see). Dr. W. Smith.

Pleting,† n. A pleading. Chaucer.

Plough, Plough (plūch), n. A plough. 'A country fellow at the plough.' Burns. [Scotch.]

Pleura (plū'ra), n. [Gr. pleuron, a rib, pl. pleura, the side.] In anat. a thin membrane which covers the inside of the thorax, and also invests the lungs. It forms a great process, the mediastinum, which divides the thorax into two cavities. The moisture on its surface permits the lungs and heart to move freely and without friction.—Pleura costalis, that part of the pleura which is in contact with the parietes.—Pleura pulmonalis, the portion of the pleura that covers the lungs.

Pleuracanthus (plū-ra-kan'thus), n. [Gr. pleura, the side, and akantha, a spine or thorn.] A genus of fossil fin-spines occurring in the carboniferous formation, and characterized by their having a row of sharp hooks or denticles on either side.

Pleural (plū'ral), a. Pertaining to the pleura; as, pleural fistula; pleural cavity; pleural hemorrhage.

Pleuralgia (plū-rāl'jī-a), n. [Gr. pleura, the side, and algos, pain.] Pain of the side; pleurodynia.

Pleurapophysis (plū-ra-pof'i-sis), n. pl. Pleurapophyses (plū-ra-pof'i-sēz). [Gr. pleuron, a rib, and apophysis, a process.] In compar. anat. one of the processes of a typical vertebra, projecting from the side. The ribs may be regarded as pleurapophyses.

Pleurenchyma (plū-ren'ki-na), n. [Gr. pleura, the side, and enchymō, to pour in.] In bot. the woody tissue of plants, consisting of elongated tubes tapering to each end.

Pleurisy (plū'ri-si), n. [Fr. pleurésie; pleuritis, from pleura, the side.] An inflammation of the pleura or membrane that covers the inside of the thorax. It is accompanied with fever, pain, difficult respiration, and cough.

Pleurisy-root (plū'ri-si-rūt), n. The Asclepias tuberosa. See ASCLEPIAS.

Pleuritic, Pleuritical (plū-rīt'ik, plū-rīt'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to pleurisy; as, pleuritic symptoms or affections.—2. Diseased with pleurisy.

Pleuritis (plū-rīt'is), n. Same as Pleurisy.

Pleurobranchia (plū-rō-brā'ki-a), n. [Gr. pleura, the side, and branchion, an arm.] A genus of Coelenterata, order Ctenophora, possessing a transparent, colourless, gelatinous, melon-shaped body. It is provided with comb-like groups of vibratile cilia, and with two very long and flexible tentacular processes, which are fringed on one side, and can be retracted at the will of the animal.

Pleurobranchidæ (plū-rō-brang'ki-dē), n. pl. [Gr. pleura, the side, and branchion, a gill.] A family of gastropodous molluscs, belonging to the tectibranchiate section of the order Opisthobranchiata. They are generally furnished with a shell, which is limpet-like, and covers the back of the animal, but is generally more or less concealed by the mantle. The gills are confined to one side of the body, and placed between the margin of the mantle and the foot.

Pleurocarpi (plū-rō-kār'pi), n. pl. [Gr. pleuron, a rib, and karpōs, fruit.] In bot. mosses, with the fructification proceeding laterally from the axils of the leaves. Balfour.

Pleurocarpous (plū-rō-kār'pus), a. In bot. having the fructification proceeding laterally from the axils of the leaves, as in some mosses. Sachs.

Pleurodiscous (plū-rō-dis'kus), a. [Gr. pleura, a side, and diskos, a quoit.] In bot. attached to the sides of a disc.

Pleurodont (plū-rō-dont), n. [Gr. pleura, and odous, a tooth.] A member of a subdivision of iguanian lizards, having the teeth ankylized to the bottom of an alveolar groove and supported by its side. Owen.

Pleurodynia (plū-rō-din'ī-a), n. [Gr. pleura, and odynē, pain.] In med. a spasmodic or rheumatic affection, generally seated in the muscles of the chest, and, ordinarily, in the intercostals; pleuralgia. Drunglison.

Pleurogynous (plū-roj'ī-nus), a. [Gr. pleura, the side, and gynē, a female.] In bot. having a glandular or tubercular elevation rising close to and parallel with the ovary.

Pleurogyratous (plū-rō-jī-rā'tus), a. [Gr. pleura, the side, and gyros, a circle.] In bot. having the ring on the theca of ferns placed laterally.

Pleuronectidæ (plū-rō-nēk'ti-dē), n. pl. [Gr. pleura, a side, and nēktes, a swimmer.] The family of the flounders, plaice, turbot, halibut, sole, and others, popularly called flatfish, readily distinguished by the form of the body, which is flattened, not from above downwards, but from side to side, and the head is so twisted that both eyes are brought to one side of the body. They belong to Cuvier's order Malacopterygii, and section Sub-brachiales, or the Anacanthini, as that group is now called after Müller.

Pleuro-peripneumony (plū-rō-per-ip-nū'mō-nī), n. Same as Pleuro-pneumonia.

Pleuro-pneumonia (plū-rō-nū-mō'ni-a), n. [Gr. pleura, and pneumōn, the lungs.] An inflammation of the pleura and substance of the lungs; a combination of pleurisy and pneumonia. It often attacks domestic animals as well as man, and sometimes proves very destructive.

Pleuroptera (plū-rōp'tēr-a), n. pl. [Gr. pleura, the side, and pteron, a wing.] A name that has been applied to the tribe of quadrupeds generally known as flying-lemurs, flying-cats, and flying-foxes. They are grouped with the bats, the insectivores, and the lemurs by different authors.

Pleurorhizæ (plū-rō-riz'ē), n. pl. [Gr. pleura, the side, and rhiza, a root.] In bot. cruciferous plants having the radicle of the embryo applied to the edges of the cotyledons. Balfour.

Pleurosisma (plū-rō-sig'ma), n. A genus of Diatomacea, containing objects, the valves of which show, with a good microscope, a series of lines, which lines, under high powers and a favourable light, may be resolved into dots, and therefore furnish excellent tests of a good microscope.

Pleurothotonos (plū-rō-thot'on-os), n. [Gr. pleurothen, from one side, and teio, to stretch.] In med. tetanus of the lateral muscles, in which the body is bent to one side.

Pleurotoma (plū-rō-tō-ma), n. [Gr. pleuron, a side, a rib, and temnō, to cut.] A genus of gasteropods, having the shell fusiform, turreted, the channel nearly as long as the spire, the slit long and narrow, and the inner lip wanting. It belongs to the family Conidae, and upwards of 400 species are known to naturalists, besides many others only found fossil.

Plevin (plev'in), n. [O.Fr. plevine, L.L. plevina.] In law, a warrant or assurance.

Plexiform (pleks'ī-form), a. [L. plexus, a fold, and forma, form.] In the form of network; complicated. Quincy.

Pleximeter, Plexometer (plek-sim'et-ēr, plek-som'et-ēr), n. [Gr. plexis, percussion, and metron, a measure.] In med. a circular or ovoid plate, composed of ivory, india-rubber, or the like, from 1½ to 2 inches in diameter, placed in contact with the body, commonly on the chest or abdomen, in diagnosis of disease by mediate percussion.

Plexure (pleks'ūr), n. [L. plexus, an interweaving, from plecto, plexum, to interweave.] An interweaving; a texture; that which is woven together.

Plexus (pleks'us), n. [L.] In anat. a net-work of vessels, nerves, or fibres.

Pliability (pli-a-bil'it-i), n. The quality of being pliable; flexibility; plianleness.

His pliability of disposition now served better than his heroism had served his brother. T. Hook.

Pliable (pli'a-bl), a. [Fr. pliable, from plier, to bend, to fold, from L. plico, to fold, to bend. See PLY.] 1. Easy to be bent; capable of yielding to force or pressure without rupture; flexible; as, willow is a pliable plant. — 2. Flexible in disposition; easy to be persuaded; readily yielding to influence, arguments, persuasion, or discipline: used in a good or bad sense.

So is the heart of some men. When smitten by God it seems soft and pliable. Fer. Taylor.

SYN. Pliant, flexible, supple, limber.

Pliableness (pli'a-bi-nes), n. The quality of being pliable; flexibility; a yielding to force or to moral influence; pliability; as, the pliableness of a plant or of the disposition. 'The ingenious pliableness to virtuous counsels in youth.' South.

Pliably (pli'a-bli), adv. In a pliable manner; yieldingly.

Pliancy (pli'an-si), n. [From pliant.] The state or quality of being pliant: (a) easiness to be bent, in a physical sense; as, the pliancy of a rod, of cordage, or of limbs. (b) Readiness to be influenced.

The clergy . . . taunted him (the Pope) with his weakness, contrasted his pliancy with the nobly obstinate resolution of Hildebrand and of Urban. Milman.

Pliant (pli'ant), a. [Fr. See PLY.] 1. Capable of being easily bent; readily yielding to force or pressure without breaking; flexible; flexible; lithe; limber; as, a pliant twig. — 2. Capable of being easily formed or moulded to a different shape; plastic; as, pliant wax.

Earth but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still retain'd th' æthereal energy. Dryden.

3. Readily influenced to good or evil; easily yielding to moral influence; easy to be persuaded.

The will was then more ductile and pliant to right reason. South.

4. † Convenient; fit. 'A pliant hour.' Shak. SYN. Flexible, limber, lithe, supple, bending, tractable, ductile, docile, obsequious.

Pliantly (pli'ant-li), adv. In a pliant manner; yieldingly; flexibly.

Pliantness (pli'ant-nes), n. The state of being pliant; flexibility.

Plica (pli'ka), n. [L., a fold. See PLY.] 1. In med. a disease of the hair, peculiar to Poland and the neighbouring countries. In this disease the hair of the head is vascularly thickened, matted, or clotted by means of a glutinous fluid secreted from its root. It sometimes, but rarely, affects the beard and the hair of the rest of the surface of the body. It is also termed Plica Polonica and Trichosis Plica. — 2. In bot. a diseased state in plants in which the buds, instead of developing true branches, become short twigs, and these in their turn produce others of the same sort, the whole forming an entangled mass.

Plicate, Plicated (pli'kāt, pli'kāt-ed), a. [L. plicatus, from plico, to fold, plica, a fold.] In bot. plaited; folded like a fan; as, a plicate leaf.

Plicately (pli'kāt-li), adv. In a plicate or folded manner.

Plicidentine (pli-si-den'tin), n. [L. plica, a fold, and E. dentine.] In anat. a modification of dentine, in which the substance appears as folded on a series of vertical vascular plates, giving a fluted appearance to the exterior of the tooth. Brande & Cox.

Plie, † v.t. or i. [Fr. plier. See PLY.] To bend; to mould. Chaucer.

Plie (plē'ā), a. [Fr. plie, bent.] In her. the same as Close: applied to a bird.

Pliers (pli'ēr), n. pl. [Fr. plier, to fold. See PLY.] A small pair of pincers with long jaws, adapted to handle small articles, and also for bending and shaping wire.

Pliform (pli'form), a. [Ply and form.] In the form of a fold or doubling. Pennant.

Plight (plit), v.t. [A. Sax. plihian, to pledge, to expose to danger, from plihit, a pledge, danger; D. verplichten, Dan. forpligte, G. verpflichten, to bind, oblige, or engage. See the noun.] To pledge; to give as a security for the performance of some act; to engage: never applied to property or goods; as, he plighted his hand, his faith, his vows, his honour, his truth or troth. Pledge is applied to property as well as to word, faith, truth, honour, &c. To plight faith is, as it were, to deposit it in pledge for the performance of an act, on the non-performance of which the pledge is forfeited.

'You fair lords,' quoth she,
'Shall plight your honourable faiths to me.' Shak.

Plight (plit), n. [A. Sax. plihit, a pledge, obligation, danger; D. and Dan. pligt, Sw. pligt, plikt, G. pflicht, duty.] 1. That which is plighted or pledged; a security; a pledge; an assurance given. 'That lord whose hands must take my plight.' Shak.

So these young hearts not knowing that they loved,
Not she at least, nor conscious of a bar
Between them, nor by plight or broken ring Bound. Tennyson.

2. Condition; state; predicament; generally, a risky or dangerous state; a distressed condition; as, to be in a wretched plight. 'In this miserable loathsome plight.' Milton.

Have comfort, for I know your plight is plied
Of him that caused it. Shak.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are. Shak.

Sometimes a good condition.

He that with labour can use them aright,
Hath gain to his comfort, and cattle in plight. Tusser.

Plight (plit), n. [Also written Plite, Pleyte, and probably a form of or closely allied to plait.] A fold; a double; a plait.

All in a silken Canus, lily white,
Purified upon with many a folded plight. Spenser.

Plight (plit), v.t. To weave; to braid; to plait. 'A plighted garment of divers colours.' Milton. 'And on his head a roll of linnen plight.' Spenser.

Plight (plit), pret. & pp. of pluck: an irregular form. Pulled; plucked.

The gates of the town he hath up plight,
And on his bak yeared him bath he. Chaucer.

Plighter (pli'tēr), n. One who or that which plights or engages. Shak.

Plim† (plim), v.i. [Perhaps allied to plump.] To swell. Gross.

Plinth (plinth), n. [Gr. plinthos, a brick or tile; L. plinthus.] In arch. a flat square member, in form of a slab, which serves as the foundation of a column; the flat square table under the moulding of the base and pedestal, at the bottom of the order. — Plinth of a statue is a base, flat, round, or square. — Plinth of a wall, the plain projecting band at the bottom of a wall. In classical and Gothic buildings the plinth is sometimes divided into two or more gradations.

Pliocene (pliō-sēn), a. and n. [Gr. pleion, more, and kainos, recent.] A geological term applied to the most modern of the divisions of the tertiary epoch. The tertiary series Sir C. Lyell divided into four principal groups, namely, the Eocene, the Miocene, the Older Pliocene, and the Newer Pliocene or Pleistocene, each characterized by containing a very different proportion of fossil recent species. (See MIOCENE, Eocene.) The newer pliocene, the latest of the four, contains from 90 to 95 per cent of recent fossils; the older pliocene contains from 35 to 50 per cent of recent fossils. The newer pliocene period is that which immediately preceded the recent era; the older pliocene period, or the crag period, is that which intervened between the miocene and the newer pliocene. The newer pliocene formations occur in Sicily and Tuscany; the older pliocene at Nice, Perpignan, Norfolk, Suffolk, and near Sienna.

Pliohippus (pliō-hip'pus), n. [From plio, for pliocene, and Gr. hippos, a horse.] A fossil genus of pachyderms, family Equidae, occurring in the pliocene or latest tertiary epochs of North America. The pliohippus was about the size of an ass.

Pliopithecus (pliō-pith-ē'thus), n. [Gr. pleion, more, and pithēkos, an ape.] In geol. an extinct ape, the remains of which are found in the miocene deposits of the south of France, having a resemblance to the tailed monkeys of South America.

Pliosaurus (pliō-sā'rus), n. Same as Pleiosaurus.

Pliskie (plis'ki), n. [Perhaps from Fr. plus que, more than (can be tolerated, or the like).] A mischievous trick; also used in the sense of plight, condition. [Scotch.]

Plite, † v.t. To plait; to fold. Chaucer.

North Brit. Rev.

Ploc (plok), n. A mixture of hair and tar for covering a ship's bottom. Simmonds.

Plocaria (plo-ká-ri-a), n. [Gr. plokos, something woven or plaited, plékō, to weave.] A genus of algae, of the order or sub-order Ceramiales. P. helminthochorton is the Corsican moss of the shops, once of some reputation as a vermifuge. P. candida, or Ceylon moss, is used to a considerable extent as an article of food in the East.

Ploceina (plō-sē-īnē), n. pl. The weaver-birds, a sub-family of Fringillidae.

Ploceus (plō-sē-us), n. [From Gr. plekō, to weave.] A genus of birds containing a number of species commonly known as weaver-birds.

Plod (plod), v.i. pret. & pp. plodded; ppr. plodding. [Comp. Prov. E. plowd, to wade, plodge, to walk through mud or water; Sc. plowder, to dabble in water; Dan. pladder, mire; Ir. and Gael. plod, plodach, a puddle: the word is probably of Celtic origin, the primary sense being to walk laboriously and painfully, as through mire.] 1. To travel or work slowly, or with steady laborious diligence. 'Barefoot plod I the cold ground upon.' Shak.

Behind his oxen slow
The patient ploughman plods. Southey.

2. To study dully but with steady diligence. 'She reasoned without plodding long.' Swift.

3. To toll; to drudge; to moli.

For that I have laid by my majesty
And plodded like a man for working days. Shak.

Plodder (plod-ēr), n. A dull, heavy, laborious person.

Small have continual plodders ever won,
Save base authority from others' books. Shak.

Plodding (plod-īng), p. and a. Given to plod or work with slow and patient diligence; patiently laborious; as, a man of plodding habits. 'Some stupid, plodding, money-loving wight.' Young.

A plodding diligence brings us sooner to our journey's end, than a fluttering way of advancing by starts. Sir R. L'Estrange.

Ploddingly (plod-īng-lī), adv. In a plodding manner; industriously; diligently; drudgingly.

Plonge (plonj), v.t. [A form of plunge.] To cleanse, as open sewers, by stirring up the mud at the bottom with a long pole as the tide in a tidal river is going down, so that both water and mud flow into the river. Plonging is opposed to flushing, which is the mode of cleansing covered sewers. Mayhew.

Plonge, Plongée (plonzh, plon-zhā), n. Miké, the superior slope of a parapet.

Flop (flop), v.i. [From smell.] To fall or plump into water. Mrs. Gaskell. [Vulgar.]

Plot (plot), n. [A Sax. plot, a spot of ground, later a spot upon something. Plat is another form. Plot in its sense of scheme stands related to plot, a piece of ground, exactly as plan, a scheme, does to plan, a design drawn on a flat surface, only plot has generally the sense of an ill design. Plot may have received the bad element in its meaning through the influence of complot, a conspiracy, of which, however, it is not necessarily an abbreviation.] 1. A plot or small extent of ground of a well-defined shape; as, a garden plot. 'A chosen plot of fertile land.' Spenser. 'Level plots of crowned lilies.' Tennyson. Also in a wider sense. 'This blessed plot, this earth, this system devised.' 'A purposed plot of government.' Spenser.

3. In surv. a plan or draught of a field, farm, estate, &c., surveyed and delineated on paper. — 4. A scheme, stratagem, or plan, usually a mischievous one; a secret project; an intrigue; a conspiracy.

O think what anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots, and their last fatal period! Addison.

5. The story of a play, poem, novel, or romance, comprising a complication of incidents which are at last unfolded by unexpected means; the intrigue.

If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before. Pope.

6. Contrivance; deep reach of thought; ability to plot. 'A man of much plot.' Sir J. Denham. — SYN. Intrigue, stratagem, conspiracy, cabal, combination, contrivance.

Plot (plot), v.t. pret. & pp. plotted; ppr. plotting. 1. To make a plan of; to draw or lay down on paper after a survey, showing the several observed angles and lines with their measured dimensions. — 2. To plan; to devise; to contrive. 'Plotting an unprofitable crime.' Dryden.

Plot (plot), v.i. 1. To form a scheme of mischief against another, or against a government or those who administer it; to conspire. The wicked plot against the just. Ps. xxxvii. 12. 2. To contrive a plan; to scheme.

The prince did plot to be secretly gone. Wotton.

Plot (plot), v.t. [Comp. Gael. plodach, luke-warm, scalding.] To scald; to make any liquid scalding hot; to steep in very hot water. [Scotch.]

Plotful (plot-ful), a. Abounding with plots. Wright.

Plotinist (plo-ti-nist), n. A disciple of Plotinus, a celebrated Platonic philosopher of the third century A.D., who taught that the human soul emanates from the Divine Being, to whom it is reunited, if good and pure, at death. If not sufficiently purified, however, during life, it entered into such animals, and even plants, as it had a liking to.

Plot-proof (plot-pröf), a. Proof against plots; not to be hurt by a plot or plots.

The harlot-king
Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank
And level of my brain, plot-proof. Shak.

Plotter (plot-ēr), n. One who plots or contrives; a contriver; a conspirator.

Plottie (plot-ti), n. [See Plot, to scald.] A sort of mulled wine. [Scotch.]

Get us a jug of mulled wine—plottie, as you call it. Sir W. Scott.

Plotting-scale (plot-īng-skāl), n. A scale used in setting off the lengths of lines in surveying. It consists of two graduated ivory scales, one of which is perforated nearly its whole length by a dovetail-shaped groove, for the reception of a sliding-piece. The second scale is attached to this sliding-piece, and moves along with it, the edge of the second scale being always at right angles to the edge of the first. By this means the rectangular co-ordinates of a point are measured at once on the scales, or the position of the point laid down on the plan.

Plotus (plō-tus), n. [Gr. plotos, flowing, from pléō, to sail.] A genus of web-footed birds of the family Pelecanidae, and resembling the gulls in appearance; the darters. See DARTER, 3.

Plough (plow), n. [Icel. plógr, Dan. ploug, plow, O. Fris. plōch, D. ploeg, G. pflug. This word is not found in A. Sax., nor does it occur in the older Icelandic writings or in Gothic. It is found in the other Teutonic languages, but like other words beginning with p was probably borrowed, though the source is not clear. The A. Sax. word for plough was sulh (still provincial in the forms sull, sulow), the O.N. arthr (from root of E. ear, L. aro, to plough).] 1. An implement drawn by animal or steam power, by which the surface of the soil is cut into longitudinal slices, and successively raised up and turned over. The object of the operation is to expose a new surface to the action of the air, and to render the soil fit for receiving the seed or harrowing, or for other operations of agriculture. Ploughs drawn by horses or oxen are of two kinds: those without wheels, commonly called swing-ploughs, and those with one or more wheels, called wheel-ploughs. The essential parts of both kinds of plough are, the beam, by which it is drawn; the stilt or handles, by which the ploughman guides it; the coulter, fixed into the beam, by which the furrow slice is cut; the share, by which the bottom of the furrow is cut and raised up; and finally, the mould-board, by which the furrow is turned over. The wheel-plough is merely the swing-plough with a wheel or pair of wheels attached to the beam for keeping the share at a uniform distance beneath the surface. Besides these two kinds there are subsoil-ploughs, drill-ploughs, draining-ploughs, &c. — Double mould-board ploughs are common ploughs with a mould-board on each side, employed for water-furrowing, earthing up potatoes, &c. — Turn-wrest ploughs are ploughs fitted either with two mould-boards, one on each side, which can be brought into operation alternately, or with a mould-board capable of being shifted from one side to the other, so that the furrow is always laid in the same direction. They are useful in ploughing hill-sides, as the furrows can all be turned towards the hill, thus counteracting the tendency of the soil to work downwards. —

Balance-ploughs are ploughs in which two sets of plough bodies and coulters are attached to an iron frame moving on a fulcrum, one set at either extremity, and pointing different ways. By this arrangement the balance-plough can be used without turning, the one part of the frame being raised out of the ground when moving in one direction, and the other when moving in the opposite. It is the front of the frame, or that farthest from where the driver sits, which is elevated, the ploughing apparatus connected with the after part being inserted and doing the work. Balance-ploughs are used in steam-ploughing. Generally two, three, or four sets of plough bodies and coulters are attached to either extremity, so that two, three, or four furrows are made at once. — Steam-ploughs on various principles have been introduced into Britain. Some are driven by one engine remaining stationary on the headland, which winds an endless rope (generally of wire) passing round pulleys attached to an apparatus called the 'anchor,' fixed at the opposite headland, and round a drum connected with the engine itself. Others are driven by two engines, one at either headland, thus superseding the 'anchor.' As steam-ploughing apparatus are usually beyond both the means and requirements of single farmers, companies have been formed at various places for hiring them out. — 2. Fig. tillage; culture of the earth; agriculture. Johnson. — 3. Name of various tools; as, (a) a joiner's instrument for grooving. See PLANE. (b) In cloth manuf. an instrument for cutting the flushing parts of the pile or nap of fustian. (c) An instrument used for cutting and smoothing the edges of books preparatory to binding or gilding. — Ice plough, an instrument used in the United States of America for cutting ice into portions suitable for storing and for sale. — The Plough, the prominent seven stars in the constellation of the Great Bear; Charles's Wain. — To put one's hand to the plough, (fig.) to begin a task; to commence an undertaking.

Plough (plow), v.t. 1. To till and turn up with a plough; as, to plough the ground for wheat; to plough it into ridges. — 2. To make furrows, grooves, or ridges in; to furrow; to run through, as in sailing.

Let patient Olivia plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. Shak.

With speed we plough the watery wave. Pope.

— To plough in, to cover by ploughing; as, to plough in wheat. — To plough up or out, to turn out of the ground by ploughing.

Plough (plow), v.i. To turn up the soil with a plough.

He that plougheth shall plough in hope. 1 Cor. ix. 10.

Plough (plow), v.t. [A corruption of pluck.] To reject, as a candidate at an examination for a degree and the like; to pluck. [University slang.]

'I have been cramming for smalls; and now I am in two races at Henley, and that rather puts the snaffle on reading and Gooseberry Pie, and adds to my chance of being ploughed for smalls.' 'What does it all mean?' inquired mamma, 'gooseberry pie!' and 'the snaffle' and 'ploughed.' 'Well, the gooseberry pie is really too deep for me; but 'ploughed' is the new Oxfordish for 'plucked.' Charles Reade.

Ploughable (plou'-bl), a. Capable of being ploughed; arable.

Plough-alms (plou'-āms), n. A penny formerly paid by every ploughland to the church.

Plough-bote (plou'-bōt), n. In Eng. law, wood or timber allowed to a tenant for the repair of instruments of husbandry.

Ploughboy (plou'-boi), n. A boy who drives or guides a team in ploughing; a rustic boy; an ignorant country fellow.

Plougher (plou'-ēr), n. One who ploughs land; a cultivator.

Plough-gang, Plough-gate (plou'-gang, plou'-gāt), n. As much land as can be properly tilled by one plough, which, according to some, is 13 acres Scotch; but it is variously estimated. Jamieson says that in his day in Fife a plough-gang or plough-gate was understood to include about 40 acres Scotch. As now regulated by various acts of Parliament for conversion of statute labour, it is held to mean 50 Scotch acres, or £70 of rental. A plough-gate of land was the property qualification to hunt under the game laws. [Scotch.]

They were exempt from the taille, and could themselves cultivate four plough-gates without paying it as cultivators. Brougham.

Plough-head (plou'hed), n. The draught-iron at the end of a plough-beam.
Plough-iron (plou'f-ern), n. The coulter of a plough. Shak.

Ploughman (plou'man), n. One that ploughs or holds a plough; a farm labourer who is or may be engaged in ploughing.

The merchant gains by peace, and the soldiers by war, the shepherd by wet seasons, and the ploughmen by dry. Sir W. Temple.

—Ploughman's spikenard, a British plant of the genus Conyza, the C. squarrosa. It is a soft and downy plant, with dull yellow flowers, and grows in mountains, meadows, and pastures. See CONYZA.

Plough-Monday (plou-mun'dā), n. The Monday after Twelfth-day, or the termination of the Christmas holidays, when the labours of the plough usually began in former times. On this Monday ploughmen were wont to draw a plough from door to door, and beg money to drink.

Plough-Monday next, after the twelfth tide is past. Bids out with the plough, the worst husband is last. Thackeray.

Ploughshare (plou'shär), n. The share or part of a plough which cuts the ground at the bottom of the furrow, and raises the slice to the mould-board, which turns it over.

Plough-shoe (plou'shö), n. A block of wood fitted under a ploughshare to prevent it penetrating the soil.

Plough-silver (plou'sil-vär), n. Money formerly paid by some tenants in lieu of service to plough the lord's lands.

Plough-sock (plou'sok), n. Same as Ploughshare. Sir W. Scott. [Scotch.]

Plough-staff (plou'staf), n. A kind of paddle to clear the coulter and share of a plough when choked up with earth or weeds: called in Scotland a pettle.

Plough-tail (plou'täl), n. That part of a plough which the ploughman holds.

Plough-wright (plou'writ), n. A tradesman who makes and repairs ploughs.

Plout-net, Pout-net (plou'net, pout'net), n. A small stocking-shaped river net attached to two poles.

Plover (pluv'ér), n. [O. Fr. pluvier, Fr. pluvier, lit. the rain bird, from L. pluvia, rain; pluo, to rain.] 1. The common name of several species of gallinaceous birds belonging to the genus Charadrius, family Charadriaceæ, section Presbirostris. They inhabit all parts of the world, traversing temperate climates in the spring and autumn. They are gregarious, and are generally seen in meadows, on the banks of rivers, or on the sea-shore. The golden plover (Charadrius ploverialis) is abundant in the Highlands and Western Isles of Scotland; the dotterel plover (C. morinellus) is common in various parts of Great Britain; the ring-plover (C. or Aegialitis hiaticula) is very abundant on the sea-coasts of Great Britain; the Kentish plover (C. cantianus) is a frequenter of shingle beaches.—2. † A loose woman: otherwise called a Quail.

Golden Plover (Charadrius ploverialis).

Here will be Zekiel Edgworth, and three or four other gallants at night, and I ha' neither plover nor quail for them: persuade this . . . to be a bird of the game. Ben Jonson.

Plumbaginaceæ, Plumbaginæ (plumb-aj'i-nā'se-ē, plumb-aj'in'ē-ē), n. pl. [L. plumbago, leadwort, from plumbum, a disease in the eyes it was supposed to cure.] A nat. order of exogens, consisting of (chiefly maritime) herbs, somewhat shrubby below, with alternate leaves, and regular pentamerous, often blue or pink flowers, with a plaited calyx, stamens opposite the petals or corolla-lobes, and a free one-celled ovary, with a solitary ovule hanging from a long cord which rises from the base of the cell. As garden plants, nearly the whole of the order is much prized for beauty, particularly the Staticeæ. The common thrift or sea-pink (Armeria maritima), with grass-like leaves and heads of bright pink flowers, is a familiar example of this order. See PLUMBAGO, 2.

Plumbaginous (plum-baj'i-nus), a. Resembling plumbago; consisting of or containing plumbago, or partaking of its properties.

Plumbago (plum-bá'go), n. [L., from plumbum, lead.] 1. Another name for Graphite. See GRAPHITE, 1.—2. A genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Plumbaginaceæ (which see). It consists of perennial herbs or undershrubs, with pretty blue, white, or rose coloured flowers in spikes at the ends of the branches. P. europæa is employed by beggars to raise ulcers upon their bodies to excite pity. Its root contains a peculiar fat which gives to the skin a lead-gray colour, whence the plant has been called leadwort. P. scandens is remarkably acrid, and on this account is called herbe du diable, or the devil's herb, in St. Domingo.

Plumb-bob (plum'bób), n. The conoid-shaped metal bob or weight attached to the end of the plumb-line or plummet.

Plumbean, Plumbeous (plum-bé'an, plum-bé'us), a. [L. plumbum, lead.] 1. Consisting of lead; resembling lead.—2. Dull; heavy; stupid. Heylin.

Plumber (plum'ér), n. [From plumb; comp. Fr. plombier, a plumber.] 1. One who plumbs.—2. One who works in lead; especially, one who fits up lead pipes and other apparatus for the conveyance of gas and water, covers the roofs of buildings with sheets of lead, &c.

Plumber-block (plum'ér-blok), n. A metal box or case for supporting the end of a revolving shaft or journal; also called a Pillow-block.

Plumber-block.

It is adapted for being bolted to the frame or foundation of a machine, and is usually furnished with brass bearings for diminishing the friction of the shaft, and a movable cover secured by bolts for tightening the bearings as they wear. Written also Plummer-block.

Plumbery, Plummery (plum'ér-i), n. 1. Works in lead; manufactures of lead; the place where plumbing is carried on.—2. The business of a plumber.

Plumbic (plum'bik), a. Pertaining to lead; derived from lead; as, plumbic acid.

Plumbiferous (plum-bif'ér-us), a. [L. plumbum, lead, and fero, to produce.] Producing lead.

Plumbing (plum'ing), n. 1. The art of casting and working in lead, and applying it to various purposes connected with buildings, as in roofs, windows, pipes, &c.—2. The act or process of ascertaining the depth of anything; specifically, in mining, the operation of sounding or searching among mines.—3. Lead pipes and other apparatus used for conveying water through a building.

Plumb-line (plum'lin), n. 1. A cord or line having a metal bob or weight attached to one end: used to determine a perpendicular.—2. A line perpendicular to the plane of the horizon; or a line directed to the centre of gravity in the earth. See PLUMMET, PLUMB-RULE.

Plumbosite (plum'bo-sit), n. Same as Boulangerite.

Plum-broth (plum'broth), n. Broth containing plums or raisins. Pope.

Plumb-rule (plum'röl), n. A narrow board with parallel edges having a straight line drawn through the middle, and a string carrying a metal weight attached at the upper end of the line. It is used by masons, bricklayers, carpenters, &c., for determining a perpendicular.

Plumbum (plum'büm), n. [L.] Lead.

Plum-cake (plum'kak), n. Cake containing raisins, currants, or other fruit.

Plume (plüm), n. [Fr., from L. pluma, the downy part of a feather, a small soft feather; cog. Armor. plü, W. pluf, plumage; Skr. plu, to swim, to fly, to sail in the air.] 1. The feather of a bird, particularly a large or conspicuous feather.—2. A feather or collection of feathers worn as an ornament, particularly an ostrich's feather; anything resembling or worn as such an ornament. Plunket (plung'ket), n. A kind of blue colour. Ainsworth.

Pluperfect (pló'pér-fékt), a. [L. plus quam perfectum, more than perfect.] In gram. applied to that tense of a verb which denotes that an action was finished at a certain period, to which the speaker refers.

It marks the relation in order or time of an event which took place before another past action or event; as, 'all the judges had taken their places before Sir Roger came.'

Addison. Often used as a noun.

Plural (pló'ral), a. [L. pluralis, from plus, pluris, more.] Containing more than one; consisting of two or more, or designating two or more. 'Plural faith which is too much by one.' Shak. In gram. the plural number is that number or form of a word which designates more than one, that is, any number except one. Thus in most languages a word in the plural number expresses two or more. Some languages, like the Greek, have a dual number to express a pair, or two.

Plural (pló'ral), n. A form of a word expressing more than one; the plural number.

Pluralism (pló'ral-izm), n. 1. The quality of being plural.—2. The state or condition of a pluralist; the system or act of holding more than one living or benefice.

Pluralist (pló'ral-ist), n. A clerk or clergyman who holds more ecclesiastical benefices than one, with cure of souls.

Plurality (pló'ral-i-ti), n. [Fr. pluralité, from L. pluralis, plural.] 1. The state of being plural; a number consisting of two or more of the same kind; as, a plurality of gods; a plurality of worlds.

Sometimes it admitteth of distinction and plurality; sometimes it reduceth all into conjunction and unity.

2. A state of being or having a greater number; the greater number; the majority.

Take the plurality of the world and they are neither wise nor good.

Sir R. L'Estrange.
3. Eccles. the holding of two or more benefices together; one of two or more benefices held at one time by the same clergyman. By the act 1 and 2 Vict. cvi. pluralities in the church are prohibited excepting in particular cases, such as where two livings are small in value and the population small, and where the livings are situated within 8 miles of each other. 'Who engross many pluralities under a non-resident and slubbing dispatch of souls.' Milton.

Pluralization (pló'ral-i-zá'shon), n. The act of pluralizing; the attributing of plurality to a person by the use of a plural pronoun, as when the Germans say sie, they, in speaking to one person. 'A mode which, while dignifying the superior by pluralization, increases the distance of the inferior.' H. Spencer.

Pluralize (pló'ral-iz), v.t. pret. & pp. pluralized; ppr. pluralizing. To make plural by using the termination of the plural number; to attribute plurality to; to express in the plural form.

Pluralize (pló'ral-iz), v.i. Eccles. to hold more than one benefice at a time. Goodrich.
Pluralizer (pló'ral-iz-ér), n. Eccles. a pluralist. Goodrich.

Plurally (pló'ral-i), adv. In a plural manner; in a sense implying more than one.

As gods are sometimes spoken of plurally, so also is God often singularly used for that supreme Deity which containeth the whole.

Cudworth.
Pluries (pló'ri-es), n. In law, a writ that issues in the third instance after the first and the alias have been ineffectual: so named because the word pluries (as often) occurs in the first clause.

Plurifarious (pló-ri-fá'ri-us), a. [L. plurifarius.] Of divers kinds or fashions; multifarious. Blount.

Plurifoliate (pló-ri-fó-li-o-lát), a. [L. plus, pluris, more, and folium, a leaf.] In bot. having many small leaves. Asa Gray.

Pluriliteral (pló-ri-lit'ér-al), a. [L. plus, more, and littera, a letter.] Containing more letters than three.

Pluriliteral (pló-ri-lit'ér-al), n. A word consisting of more letters than three.

Plurisy (pló'ri-si), n. [L. plus, pluris, more.] 1. Superabundance.

O great corrector of enormous times,
That healest with blood
The earth when it is sick, and curest the world
O' the plurisy of people.

Beau. & Fl.

2. Superabundance of blood; a plethora.
Plus (plus), [L. more.] In alg. or arith. a character marked thus +, used as a sign of addition, and which being placed between two numbers or quantities, signifies that they are to be added together. Thus a + b signifies that b is to be added to a.

Plush (plush), n. [Fr. pluche, peluche, It. peluzzo, from L. pilus, hair. See PILE.] A textile fabric with a sort of velvet nap or shag on one side, composed regularly of a woof of a single woollen thread and a double warp, the one woof of two threads twisted, the other of goats' or camels' hair. But plushes are made in as great variety as velvets, both in texture and material—cotton, wool, silk, goats' hair, &c., being used in their fabrication.

Plusher (plush'ér), n. A kind of dog-fish.

The pilchard is devoured by a bigger kind of fish called a plusher, somewhat like a dog-fish. Carew.

Plus-quam-perfect (plus-kwam-pér-fékt), a. [L. plus, more, quam, than, and perfectus, perfect.] In gram. superlative.

Pluteus (pló'té-us), n. [L.] 1. In anc. arch. the wall sometimes made use of to close the intervals between the columns of a building; it was either of stone or some less durable material when it occurred in the interior of a building; also, a balustrade; a parapet.—2. In class. milit. antiq. (a) boards or planks placed on the fortifications of a camp, on movable towers or other military engines, as a kind of roof for the protection of the soldiers. (b) A movable gallery on wheels, shaped like an arched sort of wagon, in which a besieging party made their approaches.—3. In zool. the name given to the larval form of the Echinoidea.

Pluto (pló'tó), n. [Gr. Ploutón.] In class.

Pluto and Proserpine myth. the lord of the infernal regions, son of Chronos and Rhea, and brother of Zeus (Jupiter) and Poseidon (Neptune). He is represented as an old man with a dignified but severe aspect, holding in his hand a two-pronged fork. He was generally called by the Greeks Hades, and by the Romans Orcus, Tartarus, and Dis. His wife was Persephone (Proserpine), daughter of Zeus (Jupiter) and Demeter (Ceres), whom Pluto seized in the island of Sicily while she was plucking flowers, and carried to the lower world.

Plutocracy (plō-tōk'ra-sī), n. [Gr. Ploutos, the god of wealth, and kratos, to rule.] The power or rule of wealth.

He proceeded to tell us the consequence of the bill would be that plutocracy, forsooth, constituted the evil which loomed darkly in the future.

Gladstone.

Plutonian (plō-tō'ni-an), a. Pertaining to Pluto; Plutonic. 'The night's Plutonian shore.' Poe.

Plutonian (plō-tō'ni-an), n. A Plutonist.

Plutonic (plō-ton'ik), a. [From Pluto, the king of the infernal regions.] 1. Of or relating to Pluto or to the regions of fire; subterranean; dark.—2. Pertaining to or designating the system of the Plutonists; as, the Plutonic theory.—Plutonic action, in geol. the influence of volcanic heat and other subterranean causes, under pressure.—Plutonic rocks, unstratified crystalline rocks formed at great depth beneath the earth's surface by igneous fusion; or, rocks once stratified now altered by chemical action with or without heat. The term is opposed to volcanic rocks, also formed by fire, but having cooled at or near the surface.—The Plutonic theory, which ascribes the changes on the earth's surface to the agency of fire, was first propounded, or at least most ably and strenuously maintained by Dr. James Hutton, an Edinburgh geologist in the end of the 18th century, and it was opposed with equal vigour by Werner, a celebrated German mineralogist and geologist, who maintained that all geological formations have been precipitated from water, or from a chaotic fluid; hence, the theories have been respectively designated the Huttonian and the Wernerian or Neptunian.

Plutonism (plō-ton'izm), n. The doctrines of the Plutonists.

Plutonist (plō-ton'ist), n. One who adopts the geological theory (Plutonic theory) that the present aspect and condition of the earth's crust are mainly due to igneous action.

Plutus (plō'tus), n. In Greek myth, the personification of wealth, described as a son of Iasion and Demeter. Zeus is said to have blinded him, in order, that he might not bestow his favours exclusively on good men, but that he might distribute his gifts without any regard to merit.

Pluvial (plō'vi-al), a. [L. pluvialis, from pluvia, rain, from pluo, to rain.] 1. Rainy; humid; relating to rain.—2. In geol. applied to results and operations which depend on or arise from the action of rain.

Pluvial (plō'vi-al), n. [Fr. pluvial.] A priest's cope or cloak for protection against rain.

Pluviometer (plō-vi-am'et-ēr), n. Same as Pluviometer.

Pluviometrical (plō'vi-a-met'rik-al), a. Same as Pluviometrical.

Pluviometer (plō-vi-om'et-ēr), n. [L. pluvia, rain, and Gr. metron, measure.] A rain-gauge, an instrument for ascertaining the quantity of water that falls in rain, or in rain and snow, in a particular climate or place.

Pluviometrical (plō'vi-o-met'rik-al), a. Pertaining to a pluviometer; made or ascertained by a pluviometer.

Pluviose (plō'vi-ōs), n. [Fr. lit. rainy month.] The fifth month of the French revolutionary calendar, including Jan. 20-Feb. 18 or 19.

Pluvios (plō'vi-us), a. [L. pluviosus.] Rainy; pluvial. 'A moist and pluvios air.' Sir T. Browne.

Ply (pli), v.t. pret. & pp. plied; ppr. plying. [Formerly to bend, to fold, to turn or direct, the later meanings having been developed or influenced by the compound apply. To ply a person with blows is to keep him busy with them. From Fr. plier (also ployer), to fold, to bend, from L. placare, to fold, to coil, to plait; same root as Gr. plekō, to plait. Compounds of ply are apply, comply, imply, reply, and with the collateral form ploy, deploy, employ; more directly from the Latin are complicate, implicate; and from the same stem are complex, &c.] 1. To employ with diligence; to apply closely and steadily; to keep busy; as, to ply one's needle; to ply a hammer. 'Keep house and ply his book.' Shak.

Her gentle wit she plies
To teach them truth. Spenser.

The wearied Trojans ply their shattered oars. Dryden.

2. To practise or perform with diligence; to busy one's self in.

Their bloody task, unwearied, still they ply. Waller.

3. To press hard with blows or missiles; to assail briskly; to beset. 'And plies him with redoubled strokes.' Dryden.

The hero stands above, and from afar
Plies him with darts and stones and distant war. Dryden.

4. To urge; to solicit with pressing or persevering importunity; to solicit, as for a favour.

He plies the duke at morning and at night. Shak.

Everybody who passed her turned to look after her; till coming to a stand of coaches, a coachman plied her; was accepted; alighted; opened the coach door in a hurry, seeing her hurry; &c. Richardson.

5. To present or offer to urgently and repeatedly; to urge persistently to accept; to press upon, especially with the view of conciliating favour, or with some ulterior object; as, to ply one with drink; to ply one with flattery.

They adore him, they ply him with flowers, and hymns, and incense, and flattery. Thackeray.

Ply (pli), v.t. 1. To bend; to yield.

The willow plied and gave way to the gust. Sir R. L'Estrange.

2. To busy one's self; to be steadily employed; to work steadily.

Ere half these authors be read (which will soon be with plying hard and daily), they cannot choose but be masters of any ordinary prose. Milton.

Applied also to the instrument employed.

And around the bow and long the side

The heavy hammers and mallets plied. Longfellow.

3. To offer service.

He was forced to ply in the streets, as a porter, for his livelihood. Spectator.

4. To run regularly between any two ports or places, as a vessel or vehicle; to make trips; said also of the captain or conductor; as, the steamer plies between London and Ramsgate.—5. To go in haste. 'Thither he plies undaunted.' Milton.—6. Naut. to endeavour to make way against the wind.

Ply (pli), n. 1. A fold; a plait; a twist. Often used in composition to designate the number of twists, &c.; as, a three-ply carpet.—2. Bent; turn; direction; bias.

For it is true that late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.

Their researches concerning this (pre-historic man) are profoundly interesting; but for our present business we have not to go back higher than historic man—man who has taken his ply, and who is already much like ourselves. Matt. Arnold.

Plyer (pl'ēr), n. 1. One who or that which plies.—2. pl. (a) In fort. a kind of balance used in raising and letting down a drawbridge, consisting of timbers joined in the form of St. Andrew's cross. (b) Same as Pliers.

Plymouth Brethren, Plymouthites (pl'-'mouth-breth'-'ren, pl'-'mouth-'its), n. pl. A sect of Christians who first appeared at Plymouth in 1830, but have since considerably extended over Great Britain, the United States, and among the Protestants of France, Switzerland, Italy, &c. They object to national churches as being too lax, and to dissenting churches as too sectarian, recognizing all as brethren who believe in Christ and the Holy Spirit as his Vicar. They acknowledge no form of church government nor any office of the ministry, all males being regarded by them as equally entitled to 'prophecy' or preach. Called also Darbyites, after Mr. Darby, originally a barrister, subsequently a clergyman of the Church of England, and later an evangelist unconnected with any church, to whose efforts their origin and the diffusion of their principles are much to be ascribed.

Plymouthism (pl'-'mouth-'izm), n. The doctrines of the Plymouth Brethren.

Pneumothorax, Pneumatophorax (nū-'ma-thō-'raks, nū-'mat-ō-thō-'raks), n. In med. same as Pneumothorax.

Pneumatic (nū-mat'ik), a. [Gr. pneumatikos, from pneuma, pneumatos, air, breath, spirit, from pneo, to breathe or blow.] 1. Consisting of or resembling air; having the properties of an elastic fluid; gaseous; opposed to dense or solid substances. 'The pneumatic substance being, in some bodies, the native spirit of the body.' Bacon.—2. Pertaining to air, or to elastic fluids, or their properties; as, pneumatic experiments; a pneumatic engine. 3. Moved or played by means of air; as, a pneumatic instrument of music.—4. Filled with or fitted to contain air; as, pneumatic cells.

Lastly, most of the bones were pneumatic—that is to say, were hollow and filled with air. H. A. Nicholson.

Pneumatic is applied to numerous instruments, machines, apparatus, &c., for experimenting on elastic fluids, or for working by means of the compression or exhaustion of air; as, pneumatic car; pneumatic despatch-tube; pneumatic drill; pneumatic elevator; pneumatic hammer; pneumatic hoist; pneumatic pile; pneumatic pump; pneumatic railway; pneumatic syringe; &c.—Pneumatic paradox, that peculiar exhibition of atmospheric pressure which retains a valve on its seat under a pressure of gas, only allowing a film of gas to escape.—Pneumatic philosophy, a name formerly applied to the science of metaphysics or psychology; pneumatology.

Dr. Pringle held the chair of 'ethics and pneumatic philosophy' in the university of Edinburgh.

Pneumatic philosophy must here be taken in its old sense as meaning Psychology. J. H. Burton.

—Pneumatic physicians, a name given to a sect of physicians, at the head of whom was Aethenæus, who made health and disease to consist in the different proportions of a fancied spiritual principle, called pneuma, to those of the other elementary principles.

Pneumatical (nū-mat'ik-al), a. Same as Pneumatic.

Pneumatocal (nū-mat'ik-al), n. A vaporous substance; a gas. Bacon.

Pneumatics (nū-mat'iks), n. 1. That branch of physics which treats of the mechanical properties of elastic fluids, and particularly of atmospheric air. The chemical properties of elastic fluids (air and gases) belong to chemistry. Pneumatics treats of the weight, pressure, equilibrium, elasticity, density, condensation, rarefaction, resistance, motion, &c., of air; it treats also of air considered as the medium of sound (acoustics), and as the vehicle of heat, moisture, &c. It also comprehends the description of those machines which depend chiefly for their action on the pressure and elasticity of air, as the various kinds of pumps, artificial fountains, &c.—2. The doctrine of spiritual substances; pneumatology.

Pneumatocoele (nū-mat-ō-'sēl), n. [Gr. pneuma, pneumatos, air, and kēlē, a tumour.] In surg. a distension of the scrotum by air.

Pneumatocyst (nū-mat-ō-'sist), n. [Gr. pneuma, pneumatos, air, and kystis, a cyst.] In zool. the air-sac or float of certain of the oceanic Hydrozoa (Physophoride).

Pneumatological (nū-mat-ō-'loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to pneumatology.

Pneumatologist (nū-mat-ō-'loj-ist), n. One versed in pneumatology.

Pneumatology (nū-mat-ō-'loj-ē), n. [Gr. pneuma, pneumatos, air, breath, spirit, and logos, discourse.] 1. The doctrine of, or a treatise on the properties of elastic fluids; pneumatics.—2. The branch of philosophy which treats of the nature and operations of mind or spirit, or a treatise on it.

Considered as the science of mind or spirit, pneumatology consisted of three parts—treating of the Divine mind, Theology; the angelic mind, Angelology; and the human mind. This last is now called Psychology. Sir W. Hamilton.

Pneumatometer (nū-mat-ōm'et-ēr), n. [Gr. pneuma, pneumatos, air, breath, and metron, a measure.] An instrument so constructed as to measure the quantity of air inhaled into the lungs at each inspiration and given out at each respiration; a spirometer. Called also Pneumometer.

Pneumatophore (nū-mat-ō-'fōr), n. [Gr. pneuma, pneumatos, air, and phero, to carry.] In anat. the proximal dilatation of the cono-sarc in the Physophoride which surrounds the pneumatocyst.

Pœsy (pò'e-si), n. [Fr. poésie; L. poesis, from Gr. poiesis, the art of writing poems, See POET.] 1. The art of or skill in composing poems.

A poem is the work of a poet; pœsy is his skill or craft of making; the very fiction itself, the reason or form of the work. B. Jonson.

2. Poetry; metrical composition.

Music and pœsy used to quicken you. Shak.

3. A short conceit engraved on a ring or other thing. See POSY.

A paltry ring, whose pœsy was
For all the world like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife: 'Love me and leave me not.' Shak.

[In some editions the word in the above passage is spelled pœsy, which is the modern form.]

Pœt (pò'et), n. [Fr. poète, from L. poeta, Gr. poiētēs, lit. a maker, from poieō, to make. So in our own country poets were formerly often called 'makers.' See extract under MAKER.] 1. The author of a poem; the composer of a metrical composition.

A pœt is a maker, as the word signifies; and he who cannot make, that is, invent, hath his name for nothing. Dryden.

2. One skilled in making poetry, or who has a particular genius for metrical composition; one distinguished for poetic talents; a person endowed with high imaginative powers.

The pœt's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,
Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven. Shak.

The pœt in a golden clime was born,
With golden stars above,
Dower'd with the hate of hate, the scorn of scorn,
The love of love. Tennyson.

Pœtaster (pò'et-as-tér), n. [From pœt, and the pejorative term -aster. Comp. witticaster, criticaster, &c.] A petty poet; a pitiful rhymist or writer of verses.

Let no pœtaster command or intreat
Another, extempore verses to make. B. Jonson.

Pœtastry (pò'et-as-tri), n. The work or compositions of a poetaster; contemptible verses.

Pœtess (pò'et-es), n. A female poet.

Pœtic, Pœtical (pò-é'tik, pò-é'ti-kal), a. [L. pœticus, Gr. pœtikos.] 1. Pertaining to poetry; suitable to poetry; as, a pœtical genius; pœtic turn or talent; pœtic license.

2. Expressed in poetry; having a metrical form; as, a pœtical composition. — 3. Possessing the peculiar beauties of poetry; as, a composition or passage highly pœtical. — Pœtical justice, a distribution of rewards and punishments such as is common in poetry and works of fiction, but hardly in accordance with the realities of life. — Pœtic license, a liberty or license taken by a poet with regard to matters of fact or language, in order to produce a desired effect.

Pœtically (pò-é'ti-kal-i), adv. In a poetical manner; by the art of poetry; by a poetical fiction.

The critics have concluded that the manners of the heroes are pœtically good if of a piece. Dryden.

Pœtics (pò-é'tiks), n. The doctrine of poetry; that branch of criticism which treats of the nature and laws of poetry.

Pœtize (pò-é't-iz), v. i. [Fr. poétiser.] To write as a poet; to compose verse.

I verify the truth, not pœtize. Donne.

Pœt-laureate (pò-é't-là-ré-ât), n. See under LAUREATE.

Pœt-musician (pò-é't-mù-z'i'-shan), n. An appellation given to the bard and lyrist of former ages, as uniting the professions of poetry and music.

Pœtress† (pò-é't-res), n. A female poet. Spenser.

Pœtry (pò-é't-ri), n. [O. Fr. poetrie, from poete, a poet.] 1. That one of the fine arts which exhibits its special character and powers by means of language; or, according to Aytoun, the art which has for its object the creation of intellectual pleasures by means of imaginative and passionate language, and language generally, though not necessarily, formed into regular numbers.

By pœtry we mean the art of employing words in such a manner as to produce illusion on the imagination—the art of doing by words what the painter does by means of colours. Macaulay.

2. Imaginative and artistic language or compositions; the language of the imagination or emotions rhythmically expressed, or such language expressed in an elevated style of prose. Thus much of Jeremy Taylor, Carlyle, Ruskin, Chateaubriand, &c., is true poetry, as well as our prose translations of the books of Ruth and Job, the prophetic writings, and other portions of Scripture. In its widest sense poetry designates whatever embodies the products of the imagination and fancy, and appeals to these powers in others, as well as to the finer emotions, the sense of ideal beauty, and the like. In this sense we speak of the poetry of motion, and the painter, the sculptor, or the musician inform their productions with poetry as well as the poet proper who invests thoughts in musical language.

Poetry is not the proper antithesis to prose, but to science. Poetry is opposed to science, and prose to metre. . . . The proper and immediate object of science is the acquirement or communication of truth; the proper immediate object of poetry is the communication of immediate pleasure. Coleridge.

Poison (poi'zn), n. [Fr. poison, from L. potio, potionis, a drink, a draught, from potō, to drink. See POTION.] 1. Any agent capable of producing a morbid, noxious, dangerous, or deadly effect upon the animal economy, when introduced either by cutaneous absorption, respiration, or the digestive canal. Poisons are divided, with respect to the kingdom to which they belong, into animal, vegetable and mineral; but those which proceed from animals are often called venoms, whilst those that are produced by disease have the name virus. With respect to their effects they have been divided into four classes, namely, irritant, narcotic, narcotico-acrid, and septic or putrescent. The poisons that affect the body through a puncture or abrasion may be derived from the mineral, the vegetable, or the animal kingdom; but, with a few exceptions, those derived from the mineral and vegetable kingdoms would act as efficiently if introduced into the stomach as if injected into the blood; while animal poisons are inert when introduced into the stomach, acting only by direct introduction into the blood. The most active poisons, in small doses, frequently form most valuable medicines. There are certain poisons, however, which are lethal in the smallest quantity.—2. That which taints or destroys moral purity or health; as, the poison of evil example.

This being the only remedy against the poison of sin, we must renew it as often as we repeat our sins. Dr. H. More.

Poison (poi'zn), v.t. 1. To infect with poison; to put poison in or on; to add poison to; as, to poison an arrow. 'The poison'd chalice.' Shak. 'As well might poison poison.' Shak. 'Quivers and bows and poison'd darts.' Roscommon.—2. To attack, injure, or kill by poison.

He was so discouraged that he poisoned himself and died. 2 Macc. x. 13.

Poker (pök'ēr), n. [Comp. Dan. pokker, the devil; W. pucc, a hobgoblin; E. Puck.] Any frightful object, especially in the dark; a bugbear. [Colloq. United States.]

Poker (pök'ēr), n. A favourite game at cards in the United States.

Pokerish (pök'ēr-ish), a. Frightful; causing fear, especially to children; as, a pokerish place. [Colloq. United States.]

Pokerish (pök'ēr-ish), a. Stiff, like a poker. [Colloq.]

Poker-picture (pök'ēr-pik-tūr), n. An imitation of a bistre-washed drawing, executed by singeing the surface of white wood with a heated poker. Fairholt.

Poke-sleeve (pök'slēv), n. A kind of wide sleeve. See POKE, 2.

Pokeweed, n. See POKE.

Poking (pök'ing), a. Drudging; servile. 'Bred to some poking profession, or employed in some office of drudgery,' Gray. [Colloq.]

Poking-stick (pök'ing-stik), n. An instrument formerly used in adjusting the plaits of ruffs. 'Pins and poking-sticks of steel,' Shak.

Poky (pök'i), a. Confined; cramped; musty. 'That corner is poky and narrow,' Times newspaper.

Polacca (pō-lak'a), n. [It.] A name applied to melodies written in imitation of Polish dance tunes; a polonaise.

Polacca (pō-lak'a), n. [It. polacca; Fr. polaque.] A vessel with three masts used in the Mediterranean. The masts are usually of one piece, so that they have neither tops, caps, nor cross-trees. Called also Polacre and Polaque.

Polack (pō-lak), n. A Pole; a Polander. Shak.

Polacre (po-lak'ēr), n. See POLACCA.

Polan (pō-lan), n. A piece of armour for the knee; a knee-piece.

Polander (pō-lan-dēr), n. A Pole, or native of Poland.

Polanisia (pol-a-niz'i-a), n. [Gr. polys, many, and anisos, unequal—its stamens are numerous and unequal.] A genus of plants, nat. order Capparidaceæ. The species are herbaceous plants, natives of the warmer parts of Asia and America, with palmate leaves, and terminal clusters of often showy flowers. P. viscosa or icosandra is a native of the East Indies, and is used in Cochinchina as a counter-irritant and as a vesicant. The root is used in the United States, as well as that of another species (P. graveolens), as a vermifuge.

Polaque (po-lāk'), n. See POLACCA.

Polar (pō-lār), a. [L.L. polaris, from L. polus, a pole. See POLE.] 1. Pertaining to a pole or the poles of a sphere: as, (a) pertaining to the points in which the axis of the earth is supposed to meet the sphere of the heavens; (b) pertaining to either extremity of the axis round which the earth revolves. 2. Proceeding or issuing from the regions near the poles of the earth. 'Two polar winds, blowing adverse,' Milton.—3. Pertaining to a magnetic pole or poles; pertaining to the points of a body at which its attractive or repulsive energy is concentrated.—Polar angle, the angle at a pole formed by two meridians.—Polar axis, that axis of an astronomical instrument, as an equatorial, which is parallel to the earth's axis.—Polar bear. See under BEAR.—Polar circles, two small circles of the earth parallel to the equator, the one north and the other south, distant 23° 28' from either pole. The north polar circle is called the arctic circle and the south polar circle the antarctic circle. The distance of each from its own pole is equal to the obliquity of the ecliptic, and the spaces within the two circles are called the frigid zones.—Polar clock, an optical apparatus, whereby the hour of the day is found by means of the polarization of light.—Polar co-ordinates. See under ANALYTIC.—Polar dial, a dial whose plane is parallel to the earth's axis.—Polar distance, the angular distance of any point on a sphere from one of its poles; more especially, the angular distance of a heavenly body from the elevated pole of the heavens. It is measured by the intercepted arc of the circle passing through it, or by the corresponding angle at the centre of the sphere. According as the north or south pole is elevated we have the north polar distance or the south polar distance.—Polar forces, in physics, forces that are developed and act in pairs, with opposite tendencies, as in magnetism, electricity, &c.—Polar lights, aurora borealis or australis.—Polar projection, the projection of part of the surface of a sphere on the plane of one of the polar circles, the point of projection being at the centre of the sphere.—Polar star, the polar-star. Tennyson.

Polaris (pō-lar'is), n. [Gr. polys, many, and archē, government.] Government by a number of persons; polyarchy.

Polaric (pō-lar'ik), a. Polar. [Rare.]

Polarily (pō-lar'i-li), adv. In a polarly manner. Sir T. Browne.

Polarimeter (pō-lar-im'et-ēr), n. [Polar, and Gr. metron, a measure.] Same as Polariscope.

Polarimetry (pō-lar-im'et-ri), n. The art or process of measuring or analysing the polarization of light.

Polaris (pō-lar'is), n. [L.] In astron. the pole-star.

Polariscope (pō-lar'i-skōp), n. An optical instrument, various kinds of which have been contrived, for exhibiting the polarization of light. The important portions of the instrument are the polarizing and analysing plates or prisms, and these are formed either of natural crystalline structures or of a series of reflecting surfaces artificially joined together.

Polaristic (pō-lar-is'tik), a. Pertaining to or exhibiting poles; arising from or dependent upon the possession of poles or polar characteristics; having a polar arrangement or disposition. Goodrich.

Polarity (pō-lar'i-ti), n. That quality of a body in virtue of which peculiar properties reside in certain points called poles; usually, as in electrified or magnetized bodies, properties of attraction or repulsion, or the power of taking a certain direction; as, the polarity of the magnet or magnetic needle, whose pole is not always that of the earth, but a point somewhat easterly or westerly. A mineral is said to possess polarity when it attracts one pole of a magnetic needle and repels the other.

Polarizable (pō-lar'iz-a-bl), a. Capable of being polarized.

Polarization (pō-lar'iz-ā'shon), n. 1. The act of polarizing or giving polarity to a body.—2. The state of being polarized or of having polarity.—Polarization of light, a change produced upon light by the action of certain media, by which it exhibits the appearance of having polarity or poles possessing different properties. The polarization of light may be effected in various ways, but chiefly in the following:—(1) By reflection at a proper angle from the surfaces of transparent media, as glass, water, &c. (2) By transmission through crystals possessing the property of double refraction. (3) By transmission through a sufficient number of transparent uncrystallized plates placed at proper angles.

(4) By transmission through a number of other bodies imperfectly crystallized, as agate, mother-of-pearl, &c. The knowledge of this singular property of light has afforded an explanation of several very intricate phenomena in optics.—Plane of polarization, that particular plane in which a ray of polarized light incident at the polarizing angle is most copiously reflected. When the polarization is produced by reflection the plane of reflection is the plane of polarization. According to Fresnel's theory, which is that generally received, the vibrations of light polarized in any plane are perpendicular to that plane. The vibrations of a ray reflected at the polarizing angle are accordingly to be regarded as perpendicular to the plane of incidence and reflection, and therefore as parallel to the reflecting surface.

Polarize (pôl'ér-iz), v. t. pret. & pp. polarized; ppr. polarizing. To develop polarity in: applied to rays of light when acted upon by certain media and surfaces.

Polarized (pôl'ér-izd), p. and a. Having polarity; affected by polarization; as, polarized light; polarized radiant heat.—Polarized rings, coloured rings which are seen when polarized light is transmitted through transparent media, especially through plates of a doubly refracting crystal.

Polarizer (pôl'ér-iz'ér), n. In optics, that part of a polariscope by which light is polarized: distinguished from analyser (which see).

Polarity (pôl-a-ri), a. [See POLAR.] Tending to a pole; having a direction to a pole. Sir T. Browne.

Polder (pôl'dér), n. [D.] In the Netherlands, a tract of land below the level of the sea or nearest river, which, being originally a morass or lake, has been drained and brought under cultivation.

Poldway (pôld'wá), n. Coarse sacking used for coal-bags, &c. Weale.

Pole (pôl), n. [A. Sax. pál, a pole, a stake; collateral form of pale, L.G. and D. paal, from L. páulus, a stake. See PALE.] 1. A long, slender piece of wood; a tall piece of timber: frequently used in composition; as, a carriage-pole, the beam of a vehicle which separates two horses; a bean-pole, a stake on which beans are trained; a hop-pole; a May-pole; &c.—2. A perch or rod, a measure of length containing 16½ feet or 5½ yards. Sometimes the term is used as a superficial measure, a square pole denoting 5½ × 5½ yards, or 30¼ square yards.—3. An instrument for measuring.

A peer of the realm and a counsellor of state are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

—Barber's pole, a long rod, used for a sign to many barbers' or hair-dressers' shops in Britain. It is usually painted red, with a white band running spirally round it, the colour, it is said, being imitative of blood, and the band a fillet used to tie the arm in bleeding—all indicative, it is asserted, of other times, when the calling of barber-surgeons supplied the place of the general practitioner in surgery.—Under bare poles, said of a ship when her sails are all furled.

Pole (pôl), v. t. pret. & pp. poled; ppr. poling. 1. To furnish with poles for support; as, to pole beans.—2. To bear or convey on poles. 3. To impel by poles, as a boat; to push forward by the use of poles.

Pole (pôl), n. [Fr. pole, L. polus, the pole of the heavens, the heavens, from Gr. polos, the axis of the sphere, the firmament, from peîo, to turn or move.] 1. One of the two points in which the axis of the earth is supposed to meet the sphere of the heavens; the fixed point about which the stars appear to revolve. These two extremities or fixed points are called the poles of the world, or the celestial poles.—2. One of the extremities of the earth's axis, or one of the points on the surface of our globe through which the axis passes. The northern one is called the North Pole and the southern the South Pole. Each of these poles is 90° distant from every part of the equator.—3. A point on the surface of any sphere equally distant from every part of the circumference of a great circle of the sphere; or it is a point 90° distant from the plane of a great circle, and in a line passing perpendicularly through the centre, called the axis. Thus the zenith and nadir are the poles of the horizon. So the poles of the ecliptic are two points on the surface of the sphere whose distance from the poles of the world is equal to the obliquity of the ecliptic, or they are 90° distant from every part of the ecliptic.—4. The star which is nearest the pole of the earth; the pole-star.—5. The firmament; the sky.

The God that made both sky, air, earth, and heaven, Which they beheld, the moon's resplendent globe, And starry pole. Milton.

6. One of the points of a body at which its attractive or repulsive energy is concentrated, as the free ends of a magnet, one called the north, the other south, which attract more strongly than any other part.—Magnetic pole, (a) one of the points on the earth at which the dipping-needle is vertical, or the magnetic intensity greatest. (b) One of the two points in a magnetic needle nearly corresponding to the poles of the world, the one pointing to the north, the other to the south.—Austral pole, the pole of the magnetic needle which points to the north. See AUSTRAL.—Boreal pole, the pole of the magnetic needle which points to the south. See BOREAL.—Poles of a voltaic pile or battery, the plates at the extremities of a galvanic battery, or the wires which join them, the end which is chemically passive being called the positive pole, and that which is chemically active the negative pole. See ELECTRODE.—7. In analytical geom. a point fixed upon as a point of reference for the measurement of distances and directions. See ANALYTICAL.—Pole of a glass, in optics, the thickest part of a convex lens, or the thinnest part of a concave lens; the centre of its surface. Hutton.—Poles of maximum cold, two points on the surface of the earth, in each hemisphere, of the least mean annual temperature, the two in the northern hemisphere being situated, one 100° W. lon. and 80° N. lat., mean temperature 3½ Fahr., and the other 95° E. lon. and 80° N. lat., mean temperature 1° Fahr., and each surrounded by isothermal lines in returning curve lines. Brewster.—Pole of revolution.

When a globe or sphere revolves about one of its diameters as an axis each extremity of such diameter is called a pole of revolution. In this case the different points of the surface of the sphere describe parallel circles having the poles of revolution for their poles. Pole (pôl), n. A native of Poland. Pole-axe (pôl'aks), n. [Apparently from pole, a long stick, and axe, but perhaps from poll, the head, and axe.] A kind of axe or hatchet. There are many varieties of the pole-axe: as, (a) a sort of hatchet with a handle about 15 inches in length, and a point or claw bending downward from the back of its head, used in actions at sea, to cut away the rigging of the enemy attempting to board, and to assist in mounting the enemy's ship. Also called a Boarding-axe. (b) A weapon, usually about 4 feet long, and sometimes combining a hatchet, pike, and toothed hammer, used as early as the Saxon times as the peculiar weapon of a leader of infantry, and so continued to the sixteenth century, at which period they are frequently found combined with a firearm. Short-handled pole-axes were used by knights on horseback. See POLL-AXE.

Polecat (pôl'kat), n. [Supposed to be for poult-cat, that is, chicken or poultry cat, or abbrev. from Polish-cat.] A name common to several species of digitigrade carnivora of the weasel family (Mustelidae). The common polecat (Mustela putorius or Putorius fœtidus) is found in most parts of Europe. Its body is about 17 inches long, and the tail 6 inches. The colour is dark brown. It is a nocturnal animal, sleeping during the day and searching for its prey at night. It is especially destructive to poultry, rabbits, and game, as pheasants, so that in Britain it is being rapidly exterminated by gamekeepers, farmers, and others. It has glands secreting a fetid liquor, somewhat like that of the American skunk, which it ejects when irritated or alarmed. Its hairs form the best artists' brushes. Known also as the Fitchew or Fitchet, and Foumart or Foumart. Pole-clipt (pôl'klipt), a. Surrounded or hedged in with poles. 'Thy pole-clipt vineyard.' Shak. See CLIP. 4. Poledavy (pôl-dá'vi), n. A sort of coarse canvas; hence, any coarse wares. Also written Poldavy. Cleveland.

Pole-evil (pôl'évil), n. Same as Poll-evil. Pole-lathe (pôl'laith), n. A lathe in which the work is supported between centres on posts rising from the bed, and is turned by a strap which passes two or three times round it, the lower end of the strap being connected to the treadle, and the other end to a spring pole-mark.

Polemarch (pôl'e-márk), n. [Gr. polemarchos—polemos, war, and arché, rule.] A title of several officials in ancient Greek states, especially, at Athens, the third archon, a civil magistrate who had under his care all strangers and sojourners in the city, and all children of parents who had lost their lives in the service of their country.

Pole-mast (pôl'mast), n. Naut. A mast composed of one single piece or tree, in contradistinction to one composed of several pieces.

Polemical, Polemical (pô-lem'ik, pô-lem'ik-al), a. [Gr. polemikos, from polemos, war.] 1. Pertaining to polemics; controversial; disputative; intended to maintain an opinion or system in opposition to others; as, a polemic treatise, discourse, essay, or book; polemic divinity. 'Polemical discourses.' Bp. Fell.—2. Given to controversy; engaged in supporting an opinion or system by controversy; as, a polemic writer. South.

Polemical (pô-lem'ik), n. 1. A disputant; one who carries on a controversy; one who writes in support of an opinion or system in opposition to another. 'Each staunch polemical stubborn as a rock.' Pope. 'The sarcasm and invective of the young polemical.' Macaulay.—2. A polemical controversy or argument. Prof. Geddes. [Rare.] Polemicalist (pô-lem'ik-sist), n. One given to controversy; a polemical. [Rare.]

Polemics (pô-lem'iks), n. The art or practice of disputation; controversy; controversial writings, particularly those on matters of divinity; that branch of theological learning which pertains to the history or conduct of ecclesiastical controversy.

Polemist (pôl'e-mist), n. A controversialist; a polemical. Quart. Rev. [Rare.]

Polemoniaceæ (pôl'e-mon-i-á'se-è), n. pl. A nat. order of monocotyledonous exogens with a trifid stigma, three-celled fruit, and seeds attached to an axile placenta, the embryo lying in the midst of albumen. They consist for the most part of gay-flowered herbaceous plants, natives of temperate countries, and particularly abundant in the north-western parts of America. The genera Collomia, Phlox, Leptosiphon, Gilia, and Polemonium are cultivated for their beauty.

Polemonium (pôl'e-mô'ní-um), n. [Gr. polémōnion, an uncertain plant.] A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Polemoniaceæ. P. ceruleum (Greek valerian or Jacob's-ladder) is a blue-flowered British perennial, growing wild in some places in the north of England, and also cultivated in gardens on account of its beauty.

Polemoscope (pô-lem'ô-skôp), n. [Gr. polemos, war, and skopeô, to view.] A sort of stand or frame high enough to rise above a parapet or other similar object, having a plane mirror at top so fitted as to reflect any scene upon another mirror below, and thus enable a person to see a scene in which he is interested without exposing himself. Also an opera-glass fitted with a mirror at an angle of 45°, designed for seeing objects that do not lie directly before the eye.

Polemý (pôl'e-mi), n. War; warfare; hence, contention; resistance. Sir E. Dering.

Pole-net (pôl'net), n. A net attached to a pole for fishing in rivers; a shrimping-net; a pole-net.

Polenta (pô-len'ta), n. [It. Sp. Pg. and Fr. polenta, from L. polenta, peeled barley.] 1. A kind of pudding made in Italy from semolina, Indian corn, or maize meal.—2. A thick porridge of chestnut-meal boiled in milk, used as an article of diet in France.

Pole-plate (pôl'plát), n. In carp. a sort of smaller wall-plate laid on the top of the wall, and on the ends of the tie-beams of a roof to receive the rafters.

Pole-star (pôl'stár), n. 1. A star of the second magnitude, the last in the tail of Ursa Minor. It is the nearest star to the northern celestial pole, round which it describes a small circle; it is of great use to navigators in the northern hemisphere.—2. That which serves as a guide or director; a lodestar.

Polewards (pôl'wêrdz), adv. Towards either pole.

The waters at the equator, and near the equator, would produce steam of greater elasticity, rarity, and temperature, than that which occupies the regions further polewards. Whewell.

Polewig (pôl'wig), n. The spotted goby (Gobius minutus), a pretty little fish which inhabits the British shores. It is of a transparent golden-gray colour, with a multitude of tiny black dots upon the back, and generally marked with some darkish blotches upon the sides, and a black spot on the dorsal fin.

Poley, Poley-mountain (pô'li, pô'li-moun-tin), n. A plant, the Teucrium Polium. See POLY.

Pollanthes (pol-i-an'thêz), n. [Gr. polis, a city, and anthos, a flower, i.e. city-flower, because it is much cultivated in cities.] The name of a genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Amaryllidaceæ. They are natives of Mexico, and in this country require the aid of artificial heat, under shelter of frames and glasses, to bring them to flower in perfection. The P. tuberosa or tuberosa is well known for its delicious fragrance. It emits its scent most strongly after sunset, and has been observed in a sultry evening, when the atmosphere was highly charged with electric fluid, to dart small sparks or scintillations of lucid flame, in great abundance, from such of its flowers as were fading.

Police (pô-lês'), n. [Fr. police, from L. politia, from Gr. politeia, government, administration, from polis, a city.] 1. A judicial and executive system in a national jurisprudence which is specially concerned with the quiet and good order of society; the means instituted by a government or community to maintain public order, liberty, property, and individual security. In its most popular acceptation the police signifies the administration of the municipal laws and regulations of a city or incorporated town or borough. The primary object of the police system is the prevention of crime and the pursuit of offenders; but it is also subservient to other purposes, such as the suppression of mendicancy, the preservation of order, the removal of obstructions and nuisances, and the enforcing of those local and general laws which relate to the public health, order, safety, and comfort.—2. An organized civil force for maintaining order, preventing and detecting crime, and enforcing the laws; the body of men by which the municipal laws and regulations of a city, incorporated town or borough, or rural district, are enforced. A police force may be either open or secret. By an open police is meant officers dressed in their accustomed uniform, and known to everybody; while by a secret police is meant officers whom it may be difficult or impossible to distinguish from certain classes of citizens, whose dress and manners they may think it expedient to assume, in order that they may the more easily detect crimes, or prevent the commission of such as require any previous combination or arrangement. See DETECTIVE, CONSTABLE.—Military police, (a) an organized body employed within an army to maintain civil order, as distinct from military discipline. (b) A civil police having a military organization. Such are the French gendarmier, the shirri of Italy, and the Irish constabulary.—Police burgh. See BURGH.—Police commissioner, in Scotland, one of a body elected by the ratepayers to manage police affairs in burghs.—Police constable, police officer. A member of a police force; a policeman.—Police court, a court for the trial of offenders brought up on charges preferred by the police.—Police inspector, a superintendent of police.—Police magistrate, a judge who presides at a police court.—Police office, police station, the headquarters of the police, or of a section of them; the house to which offenders are taken in the first instance.—Police rate, a tax levied for the purposes of the police.—Police sergeant, a superior police officer.

Policed (pô-lêst'), a. Regulated by laws; furnished with a regular system of laws and administration.

From the wilds she came
To policed cities and protected plains. Thomson.

Policeman (pô-lês'man), n. One of the ordinary police, whose duty it is to perambulate on a certain beat for a fixed period, for the protection of property, and to see that the peace is kept.

Policial (pô-li'shal), a. Of or pertaining to the police. Poe. [Rare.]

Policiéd (pô-li-sid), a. Regulated by laws; having a system of laws and administration. Bacon; Young; Burke.

Policy (pô-li-si), n. [L. politia, Gr. politeia, polity. See POLICE.] 1.† Polity.—2. The art or manner of governing a nation; that system of measures which the government of a country adopts and pursues as the best adapted to the interests of the nation, with respect either to its relations with foreign powers or to internal arrangement; the line of conduct which the rulers of a nation adopt on particular questions, especially with regard to foreign countries; as, domestic policy, or the system of internal regulations in a nation; foreign policy, or the measures which respect foreign nations; commercial policy, or the measures which respect commerce.

He has the ear of the House, not the heart of the country. An oracle on subjects of mere business, in the great questions of policy he is comparatively a failure. Lord Lytton.

3. The principles on which any measure or course of action is based, having regard to both the ends aimed at and the means used to arrive at them.

The policy of all laws has made some forms necessary in the wordings of last wills and testaments. Blackstone.

4. Prudence or wisdom of governments or individuals in the management of their affairs public or private.

Kings will be tyrants from policy when subjects are rebels from principle. Burke.

The wisdom of this world is sometimes taken in Scripture for policy, and consists in a certain dexterity of managing business for a man's secular advantage. South.

5. Dexterity of management.

The very policy of a hostess, finding his purse so far above his clothes, did detect him. Furber.

6.† Motive; inducement; object.

What policy have you to bestow a benefit where it is counted an injury. Sir P. Sidney.

7. In Scotland, the pleasure-grounds around a nobleman's or gentleman's country residence. In this use its primary sense is the place or tract within which one has authority to administer affairs.—Policy, Polity. Policy is the course of conduct pursued, or the management of an affair, in certain circumstances; polity, the general principles on which such course of conduct is based.

Policy (pô-li-si), n. [Fr. police, Fr. polissia; It. polizza, L.L. polegium, poleticum, a register, from polyptychum, Gr. polyptychon, an account-book—polyte, many, and ptyche, a fold, from ptysso, to fold.] 1. A written contract by which a corporation or other persons engage to pay a certain sum on certain contingencies, as in the case of fire or shipwreck, in the event of death, &c., on the condition of receiving a fixed sum or percentage on the amount of the risk, or certain periodical payments. See INSURANCE.—2. A ticket or warrant for money in the public funds.—Open policy, a policy in which the amount of the interest insured is left to be ascertained in case of loss.—Valued policy, one in which a value has been set on the goods insured, to save the necessity of proving it in case of loss.—Wagering policy, or wager policy, a pretended insurance founded on an ideal risk, where the insured has no interest in the thing insured, and can therefore sustain no loss by the happening of any of the misfortunes insured against. Such insurances are usually expressed by the words, 'interest or no interest.' Notwithstanding the general principle that insurance is a contract of indemnity, such policies came in England to be held as legal contracts at common law; and the gambling thus legalized became so prevalent and injurious, that wager policies, as above defined, were prohibited by the statute 19 Geo. III. c. 37.

Policy† (pô-li-si), v.t. To reduce to order; to regulate by laws. 'For policying of cities and commonalties with new ordinances and constitutions.' Bacon.

Policy-holder (pô-li-si-hôld'êr), n. One who holds a policy or contract of insurance.

Poligar (pô-li-gar), n. In India, the head of a village or district; also, a semi-independent chief.

Poling (pô'ling), n. 1. Act of using poles for any purpose.—2. In hort. the operation of dispersing worm-casts with poles.—3. Poles collectively; the boards lining the inside of a tunnel during its construction, to prevent the falling of the earth or other loose material.

Poliorcetics (pô-li-or-set'iks), n. [Gr. poliorkêtikos, fit for besieging, from poliorkêō, to besiege a city—polis, a city, and herkos, a hedge.] The art or science of besieging towns. [Rare.]

This art (however simple and gross at first) opened at length into wide subordinate arts, into strategics, into tactics, into castrametation, into poliorcetics, into all the processes through which the first rude efforts of martial cunning finally connect themselves with the exquisite resources, mathematic and philosophic, of a complete science. De Quincy.

Polish (pô'lish), a. Pertaining to Poland or to its inhabitants.

Polish (pô'lish), n. The language of the Poles.

Polish (pô'lish), v.t. [Fr. polir, polissant, from L. polio, to smooth, furnish.] 1. To make smooth and glossy, usually by friction; as, to polish glass, marble, metals, and the like.

Pygmalion, with fatal art,
Polish'd the form that stung his heart. Granville.

2. To refine; to wear off rudeness, rusticity, and coarseness; to make elegant and polite; as, to polish life or manners.

The Greeks were polished by the Asiatics and Egyptians. Dr. S. S. Smith.

—To polish off, to finish off quickly, as a dinner, an adversary, &c. [Slang.]

I fell them in against the wall and told some Sikhs, who were handy, to polish them off. W. H. Russell.

Polish (pô'lish), v.i. To become smooth; to receive a gloss; to take a smooth and glossy surface; to become refined. 'A kind of steel which would polish almost as white and bright as silver.' Bacon.

Polish (pô'lish), n. 1. A substance used to impart a gloss. See FRENCH-POLISH.—2. A smooth glossy surface produced by friction; artificial gloss.

Another prism of clearer glass and better polish seemed free from veins. Newton.

3. Refinement; elegance of manners.

What are these wondrous civilizing arts,
This Roman polish, and this smooth behaviour?
Addison.

Polishable (pô'lish-a-bl), a. Capable of being polished.

5. Treating of politics or government.

The malice of political writers, who will not suffer the best and brightest of characters to take a single right step for the honour or interest of the nation. Junius.

—Political economy, the science of the laws which regulate the production, distribution, and consumption of the products, necessary, useful, or agreeable to man, which it requires some portion of voluntary labour to produce, procure, or preserve; but much discussion has arisen among different writers as to the extent, the object, and the various subjects to be comprehended under the science. It is, in general, said of political economy, that its object is to ascertain the circumstances most favourable for the production of wealth, and the laws which determine its distribution among the different ranks and orders into which society is divided; and this definition seems quite unexceptionable, provided it be clearly understood that by wealth in this science is meant only those articles or products which require some portion of human industry for their production, acquisition, or preservation, and which, consequently, possess exchangeable value. The principal topics discussed by political economists are:—(1) The definition of wealth; (2) of productive and unproductive labour; (3) on the nature and measures of value; (4) on the rent of land; (5) the wages of labour; (6) the profits of capital; (7) the results of machinery; (8) the circulating medium or currency; (9) the nature and conditions of commerce or exchange of commodities.—Political geography. See under GEOGRAPHY.

The duchess has been most politically employed in sharpening those arms with which she subdued you. Pope.

Politics (pó-lít-iks), n. [Fr. politique, Gr. politiké, from polis, POLITY, POLICY.] 1. The science of government; that part of ethics which relates to the regulation and government of a nation or state for the preservation of its safety, peace, and prosperity; comprehending the defence of its independence and conquest, the augmentation of its strength and resources, and the protection of its citizens in their rights, with the preservation and improvement of their morals. Politics, in its widest extent, is both the science and the art of government, or the science whose subject is the regulation of man in all his relations as the member of a state, and the application of this science. In other words, it is the theory and practice of obtaining the ends of civil society as perfectly as possible. The subjects which political science comprises have been arranged under the following heads:—(1) Natural law; (2) abstract politics, that is, the object or end of a state, and the relations between it and individual citizens; (3) political economy; (4) the science of police, or municipal regulation; (5) practical politics, or the conduct of the immediate public affairs of a state; (6) history of politics; (7) history of the political systems of foreign states; (8) statistics; (9) positive law relating to state affairs, commonly called constitutional law; (10) practical law of nations; (11) diplomacy; (12) the technical science of politics, an acquaintance with the forms and style of public business in different countries. In common parlance we understand by the politics of a country the course of its government, more particularly as respects its relations with foreign nations.—2. In a looser sense, political affairs, or the conduct and contests of political parties. In this sense often called Party Politics.

When we say that two men are talking politics, we often mean that they are wrangling about some mere party question. F. W. Robertson.

Polium*), found on the shores of the Mediterranean. T. aureum, or golden poly, and T. flavescens, or yellow poly, are found in the same locality. —Mountain poly (Bartsia alpina) is a native of Britain. Spelled also Poley.

Polyacoustic (pô'li-a-kous'tik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and akouô, to hear.] Capable of multiplying or magnifying sound.

Polyacoustic (pô'li-a-kous'tik), n. An instrument to multiply sounds.

Polyacoustics (pô'li-a-kous'tiks), n. The art of multiplying sounds.

Polyad (pô'li-ad), n. [Gr. polys, many.] In chem. a polyatomic element; a triad, tetrad, hexad, and so on. Roskoff.

Polyadelph (pô'li-a-delf'), n. [Gr. polys, many, and adelphos, brother.] In bot. a plant having its stamens united in three or more bodies or bundles by the filaments.

Polyadelph.

Polyadelphian (pô'li-a-delf'i-an), a. Same as Polyadelphous.

Polyadelphous (pô'li-a-delf'us), a. In bot. having its stamens united in three or more bundles or parcels, as in Hypericum.

Polyandria (pô-li-an'dri-a), n. [Gr. polys, many, and aner, andros, a male.] 1. Same twenty, arising immediately from below the ovary.

Polyandrian (pô-li-an'dri-an), a. Same as Polyandrous.

Polyandric (pô-li-an'drik), a. Relating to or characterized by polyandry. 'Polyandric marriage.' West. Rev.

Polyandrous (pô-li-an'drus), a. Having many stamens, that is, any number above twenty, inserted in the receptacle.

Polyandry (pô-li-an'dri), n. The practice of females having more husbands than one at the same time; plurality of husbands. Polyandry is believed to have had its origin in unfertile regions, in an endeavour to check the undue pressure of population on the means of subsistence. It prevails now chiefly among the Buddhists of Central Asia and of Ceylon, and is in the former area strictly limited to the marriage of the woman to two or more brothers. The surplus unmarried women are provided for in Lama nunneries.

Polyanthes (pô-li-an'thêz), n. A plant. See POLIANTHES.

Polyanthus (pô-li-an'thus), n. [Gr. polys, many, and anthos, a flower.] A garden variety of the oxlip primrose (Primula elatior), whose flowers are in umbels, on a scape or flower-stalk, from 3 to 6 inches or more. It is one of those plants which have from time immemorial been favourites in gardens. Florists regard this a good variety of this flower should possess a strong scape, a well-filled truss, a corolla with a short tube, a bright yellow eye, and a deep rich brown crimson limb, bordered with a well-defined yellow edging. See PRIMROSE. —Polyanthus narcissus, a species of Narcissus, the N. Tazetta.

Polyarchist (pô-li-ark-ist), n. One who favours polyarchy. 'He (Plato) was no polyarchist, but a monarchist.' Cudworth.

Polyarchy (pô-li-âr-ki), n. [Gr. polys, many, and archô, to govern.] The government of many, whether a privileged class (aristocracy) or the people at large (democracy). Cudworth.

Polyatomic (pô'li-a-tom'ik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and E. atomic.] In chem. a term applied to elements or radicals which have an equivalency greater than one; as, polyatomic alcohol.

Polyautography (pô'li-a-tog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. polys, many, autos, he himself, and graphô, to write.] The art or practice of multiplying copies of one's own handwriting or of manuscripts, by printing from stone; a species of lithography.

Polybasic (pô-li-bâs'ik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and E. basic.] In chem. having or combined with several bases; polyatomic; as, polybasic acids.

Polybasite (pô'li-bâ-sit), n. [Gr. polys, many, and basia, base.] An iron-black ore of silver, consisting of silver, sulphur, and antimony, with some copper and arsenic.

Polycarpic (pô-li-kâr'pik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and karpós, fruit.] In bot. having the carpels distinct and numerous, each flower bearing several fruits; a term applied to a plant which bears fruit many times without perishing.

Polycarpon (pô-li-kâr'pon), n. A genus of plants, nat. order Illecebraceae. There is but a single species, P. tetraphyllum, or four-leaved all-seed, an insignificant British plant, growing on the southern coasts of England.

Polycarpus (pô-li-kâr'pus), a. Same as Polycarpic.

Polycephalous (pô-li-sef'a-lus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and kephalê, the head.] In bot. having a common support, capped by many like parts.

Polychoerany (pô-li-kê'ra-ni), n. [Gr. polychoerânê, from polys, many, and koiranós, lord or ruler. The word should not have been written with ch.] A government by many rulers, lords, or princes. Cudworth. [Rare.]

Polychord (pô'li-kord), a. [Gr. polys, many, and E. chord.] Having many chords or strings.

Polychord (pô'li-kord), n. In music, (a) a bow instrument with ten strings, resembling the double bass without a neck. It never came into general use. (b) An octave coupler. See under OCTAVE.

Polycrest† (pô'li-krest), n. [Gr. polys, many, and chrêstos, useful.] A medicine that serves for many uses, or that cures many diseases. —Polycrest salt, in old chem. potassic sulphate, also sodio-potassic tartrate.

Polychroism (pô'li-kro-izm), n. [Gr. polys, many, and chroizô, to colour.] Same as Pleochroism.

Polychroite (pô-li-kro'it), n. The colouring matter of saffron, so named in consequence of the variety of colours which it exhibits when acted upon by various reagents.

Polychromatic (pô'li-kro-mat'ik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and chrôma, colour.] In mineral. exhibiting a play of colours. — Polychromatic acid. See under POLYCHROMIC.

Polychrome (pô'li-krôm), n. [See above.] ($C_{21}H_{29}O_{13}$) A fluorescent substance obtained from the bark of the horse-chestnut and from quassia wood, &c. A solution of polychrome appears colourless by transmitted light, but blue by reflected light. Acids destroy the fluorescence of the liquid; alkalis increase it.

Polychrome (pô'li-krôm), a. Having several or many colours; executed in the manner of polychromy; as, polychrome sculpture. Eng. Ency. — Polychrome printing, the art of printing in one or more colours at the same time.

Polychromic (pô'li-kro-mik), a. Same as Polychromatic. — Polychromic acid (called also Aloetic Acid), an acid produced by the action of nitric acid upon aloes.

Polychromy (pô'li-kro-mi), n. [Gr. polys, many, and chrôma, colour.] The ancient practice of colouring statues, and the exteriors and interiors of buildings. This practice dates from the highest antiquity, but probably reached its greatest perfection in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries.

Polyconic (pô-li-kon'ik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and kônos, a cone.] Pertaining to or based upon many cones. — Polyconic projection, a projection or development of the earth's surface, or a portion of it, which supposes each parallel of latitude represented on a plane by the development of a cone having the parallel for its base and its vertex in the point where a tangent at the parallel intersects the earth's axis. This projection differs from the conic in supposing a different cone for each parallel, while the latter assumes but one cone for the whole map. Goodrich.

Polycotyledon (pô'li-kot-il-ê'don), n. [Gr. polys, many, and kotylêdon, a cavity.] In bot. a plant that has many or more than two cotyledons or lobes to the seed. Instances of this occur in plants of the cruciferous order, in Lepidium and Schizopetalum, in the boraginaceous order, in the genus Amsinckia, and especially in coniferous plants.

Polycotyledonous (pô'li-kot-il-ê'don-us), a. Having more than two lobes to the seed.

Polycracy (pô-li-kra-si), n. [Gr. polys, many, and krato, to govern.] Government by many rulers; polyarchy.

Polycystina (pô'li-sis-ti'na), n. pl. [Gr. polys, many, and kystis, a cyst.] A family of Rhizopoda, having a siliceous instead of a calcareous shell, which is often most beautifully sculptured. They are all minute, and are frequently found in infinite multitudes, forming a coloured cloud on the surface of the sea.

Polycystine (pô-li-sis'tin), n. A microscopic marine animal of the family Polycystina (which see).

Polydactylism (pô-li-dak'til-izm), n. [Gr. polys, many, and daktylos, a finger.] The condition of having several or many fingers.

Polydactylism graduates by multifarious steps from a mere cutaneous appendage, not including any bone, to a double hand. Darwin.

Polydipsia (pô-li-dip'si-a), n. [Gr. polys, much, and dipsa, thirst.] In med. a disease characterized by extreme thirst, and by an enormous discharge of pale, watery urine.

Polyedron, Polyedrous (pô-li-ê'dron, pô-li-ê'drus). See POLYHEDRON and POLYHEDRAL.

Polyembryonate, Polyembryonic (pô-li-em'bri-on-ât, pô-li-em'bri-on'ik), a. In bot. pertaining to polyembryony; consisting of or having several embryos.

Polyembryony (pô-li-em'bri-o-ni), n. [From Gr. polys, many, and embryon, an embryo.] In bot. a phenomenon occurring, sometimes regularly and sometimes abnormally, in the development of the ovules of flowering plants, consisting in the existence of two or more embryos in the same seed. In angiospermous plants several germinal masses usually occur in the unfertilized embryo-sac, but in most cases only one of these is impregnated, and, although occasionally Polyandria—Anemone nemorosa. a, Stamens and Pistils.

as Polyandry. — 2. pl. In bot. the name given by Linnæus to a class of hermaphrodite plants having many stamens, or more than ch, chain; ch, Sc. loch; g, go; j, job;

n, Fr. ton; ng, sing; TH, then; th, thin;

w, wig; wh, whig; zh, azure. — See KEY.

more than one commence the course of development, as in the Orchidaceæ, generally all but one become subsequently obliterated. In the orange, however, this is not the case, and its ripe seeds are met with containing more than one embryo.

Polyfoil (po-li-fôil), n. [Gr. polys, and L. folium, a leaf.] In arch. a leaf ornament of more than five divisions. Also termed Multifoil.

Polygala (po-li-ga-la), n. [From Gr. poly, much, and gala, milk.] A genus of plants of the nat. order Polygalaceæ. The species abound in milky juice, and are found in most parts of the world. The root of P. Senega (senega or seneca root or Virginian snake-root) is a stimulating diuretic, useful in pneumonia, asthma, and rheumatism. It has been used with great success in croup, and in America as a cure against the bite of venomous reptiles. It is a perennial plant with slender ascending stems, 6 to 12 inches high, and spikes of dull white flowers. It is a native of North America. P. vulgaris, or milkwort, is a British plant, common in dry pastures. See MILKWORT.

Polygalaceæ (po-li-ga-læ'se-ë), n. pl. A nat. order of polypetalous plants, remarkable for the union of their stamens into a single body, for their one-celled anthers, opening with a pore, and for their irregular petals, one of which is often keel-shaped and beautifully bearded. The order consists of herbaceous plants or shrubs, the leaves of which are usually bitter and the root milky. Many of them are cultivated for their beauty. See POLYGALA.

Polygaine (po-li-g'ain), n. ($C_6H_{12}O_{20}$) A non-nitrogenous vegetable principle obtained from common soapwort, Oriental soapwort, quillaia-bark, horse-chestnuts, roots of pinks, in the corncockle, white campion, scarlet lychnis, senega-root (Polygala Senega), &c. It is in the form of a white powder, and is very bitter. Called also Senegin, Saponin.

Polygam (po-li-gam), n. [Gr. polys, many, and gamos, marriage.] A plant belonging to the Linnean class Polygamia.

Polygamia (po-li-ga'mi-a), n. pl. In the Linnean system, a class of plants bearing hermaphrodite flowers, with male or female flowers, or both, not inclosed in the same common calyx, but scattered either on the same plant or on two or three distinct individuals in different flowers.

Polygamian (po-li-ga'mi-an), a. Pertaining or relating to the class of plants Polygamia; producing hermaphrodite flowers, with male or female flowers, or both.

Polygamist (po-li-ga'mist), n. [See POLYGAMY.] A person who practises polygamy or who maintains its lawfulness.

Polygamize (po-li-ga'miz), v. i. To practise polygamy.

Polygamous (po-li-ga'mus), a. 1. Relating to or characterized by polygamy; as, polygamous marriages.—2. Inclined to polygamy; having a plurality of wives.—3. In bot. same as Polygamian.

Polygamy (po-li-ga'mi), n. [Gr. polys, many, and gamos, marriage.] A plurality of wives or husbands at the same time, or the having of such plurality. In Christian countries, when a man has more wives than one, or a woman more husbands than one, at the same time, the offender is punishable for polygamy. But polygamy in the form of polygyny is allowed in some countries, especially amongst Mohammedans, and is held a matter of faith and duty by the Mormons. In the form of polyandry it exists among the Buddhists of Central Asia and Ceylon.

Polygar (po-li-gär), n. See POLIGAR.

Polygarchy (po-li-gär-ki), n. [Gr. polys, many, and arché, government.] Government by many; polyarchy. Bowyer.

Polygastric (po-li-gas'tri-a), n. pl. Same as Polygastrica.

Polygastrian (po-li-gas'tri-an), n. and a. Same as Polygastric.

Polygastric (po-li-gas'trik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and gaster, a stomach.] Having or supposed to have many stomachs. Agassiz.

Polygastric (po-li-gas'trik), n. An animal having or appearing to have many stomachs, as some of the Infusoria.

Polygastrica (po-li-gas'tri-ka), n. pl. A name given to the Infusoria by Ehrenberg, who mistook the food particles which move slowly through the soft tissue of those animals for so many stomachs: in reality they have no stomach nor intestine. The term is now abandoned.

Polygenesis (po-li-jen'ë-sis), n. [Gr. polys, many, and genesis.] In biol. the doctrine that beings have their origin in many cells or embryos of different kinds: opposed to monogenesis, or the doctrine that all beings are derived from a single cell.

Polygenetic (po-li-je-net'ik), a. Of or relating to polygenesis. See MONOGENETIC.

Polygenous (po-li-jen-us), a. [Gr. polys, many, and genos, kind.] Consisting of many kinds; as, a polygenous mountain, which is composed of strata of different species of stone.

Polygny (po-li-jë-ni), n. [Gr. polys, many, and genos, race, species.] The doctrine that mankind do not form one but many distinct species, sprung from stocks specifically distinct.

Polyglossary (po-li-glos'a-ri), n. [Gr. polys, many, and glossa, a tongue, a language.] A glossary or dictionary in several languages. Gent. Mag.

Polyglot (po-li-glôt), a. [Gr. polys, many, and glotta, glossa, a tongue, a language.] Having or containing many languages: many-language; as, a polyglot lexicon or Bible.

Polyglot (po-li-glôt), n. 1. A book containing many languages, particularly the Bible, containing the Scriptures in several languages; as, the Complutensian Polyglot, Walton's English Polyglot, &c. The term is sometimes with less correctness applied to the text of one of the versions of a proper polyglot printed by itself.—2. † One who understands many languages. 'A polyglot or good linguist.' Howell.

Polyglottous (po-li-glôt'us), a. Speaking many languages. 'The polyglottous tribes of America.' Max Müller.

Polyglycerine (po-li-gli'ster-in), n. [Gr. polys, many, and E. glycerine.] A condensed variety of glycerine. Rosinier.

Polygon (po-li-gon), n. [Gr. polys, many, and gonia, an angle.] In geom. a plane figure of many angles and sides, or at least of more than four sides. A polygon of five sides is termed a pentagon; one of six sides, a hexagon; one of seven sides, a heptagon, and so on. Similar polygons are those which have their several angles equal each to each, and the sides about their equal angles proportionals. All similar polygons are to one another as the squares of their homologous sides. If the sides, and consequently the angles, are all equal, the polygon is said to be regular; otherwise, it is irregular. Every regular polygon can be circumscribed by a circle, or have a circle inscribed in it.

Polygon of forces, in mech. the name given to a theorem which is as follows:—If any number of forces act on a point, and a polygon be taken, one of the sides of which is formed by the line representing one of the forces, and the following sides in succession by lines representing the other forces in magnitude, and parallel to their directions, then the line which completes the polygon will represent the resultant of all the forces.

Polygonaceæ (po-li-go-nä'se-ë), n. pl. [See POLYGON.] A nat. order of apetalous plants with trigonal fruit, and usually with stipules united into a tube or ocrea, through which the stem passes. The order consists chiefly of herbaceous plants, many of which are mere weeds, as for example our docks and wild polygonums. Some, however, are handsome flowers, as Polygonum orientale and amplexicaule. Others are valuable for cooking and for their tonic qualities, as Rhubarb. Some are astringent, as Coccoloba uvifera.

Polygonal (po-li-g'on-al), a. Having the form of a polygon; having many angles.—Polygonal numbers, in arith. the successive sums of a series of numbers in arithmetical progression. When the common difference of the series is 1, the sums of the terms give the triangular numbers; when the common difference is 2, the sums give the square numbers; when it is 3, the sums give the pentagonal numbers, and so on. (See Figure numbers under FIGURATE.) These numbers are called in general polygonal numbers, from possessing this property, that the same number of points may be arranged in the form of that polygonal figure to which it belongs. For example, the pentagonal numbers 5, 12, 22, 35, 51, &c., may be severally arranged in a pentagonal form.

Polygonometry (po-li-go-nom'et-ri), n. [Polygon, and Gr. metron, a measure.] An extension of trigonometry, or the doctrine of polygons, as trigonometry is the doctrine of triangles.

Polygonous (po-li-g'on-us), a. Polygonal. Polygonum (po-li-g'on-un), n. [Gr. poly, many, and gonia, a knee, a knot, referring to the numerous joints of the stem.] A genus of herbaceous plants, nat. order Polygonaceæ. They are found in the temperate regions of Europe, Africa, North America, and Asia. They are herbaceous, rarely shrubby plants, with alternate stipulate or exstipulate leaves, and spikes of small pink flowers. Various species are found in Britain. P. Bistorta (great bistort or snake-weed) is a perennial plant growing in woods and meadows; its root was formerly used in medicine. P. aviculare is our common knotgrass. P. Fagopyrum, or buckwheat, is cultivated for the sake of its green fodder; the seeds also furnish a nutritious meal, which, in some parts of England, is made into thin cakes called crumpets. Several British species are known by the name of persicaria, but the garden persicaria is the P. orientale.

Polygonum (po-li-g'o-ni), n. A plant of the genus Polygonum; specifically, the Polygonum aviculare, or knotgrass.

Polygram (po-li-gram), n. [Gr. polys, many, and gramma, a writing.] A figure consisting of many lines.

Polygraph (po-li-graf), n. [See POLYGRAPHY.] 1. An instrument for multiplying copies of a writing with ease and expedition. 2. A collection of different works written either by one or by different authors.

Polygraphic, Polygraphical (po-li-graf'ik, po-li-graf'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to polygraphy; as, a polygraphic instrument.—2. Done with a polygraph; as, a polygraphic copy or writing.

Polygraphy (po-li-gra-fi), n. [Gr. polys, many, and graphê, a writing, from graphô, to write.] The art of writing in various characters, and of deciphering the same.

Polygrooved (po-li-grövd), a. Having many grooves.

(The guns) are similar in construction, and will both be polygrooved in the rifling. Times newspaper.

Polygyn (po-li-jin), n. [Gr. polys, many, and gynê, a female.] In bot. a plant of the order Polygynia.

Polygynia (po-li-jin'i-a), n. pl. One of the orders in the fifth, sixth, twelfth, and thirteenth classes of the Linnean system, comprehending those plants which have flowers with many pistils, or in which the pistils or styles are more than twelve in number.

Polygynian, Polygynous (po-li-jin'i-an, po-li-jin-us), a. Having many styles; belonging to the order Polygynia.

Polygynic (po-li-jin'ik), a. Pertaining to polygyny; practising polygyny. H. Spencer.

Polygynist (po-li-jin'ist), n. One who practises polygyny.

According to Dove, the Tasmanians were polygynists, and Lloyd says that polygyny was universal among them. H. Spencer.

Polygynœcial (po-li-jin'ë-shi-al), a. [Gr. polys, many, gynê, a female, and oikos, a house.] In bot. a term applied to multiple fruits formed by the united pistils of many flowers.

Polygyny (po-li-jin'i), n. [Gr. polys, many, and gynê, a female.] The practice of having more wives than one at the same time.

Polyhalite (po-li-hal'it), n. [Gr. polys, many, and hals, salt.] A mineral or salt occurring in masses of a fibrous structure, of a brick red colour, being tinged with iron. It contains sulphate of lime, of magnesia, of potash, and of soda. It is found at Ischel in Austria, and also at Salzburg.

Polyhedral (po-li-hē'dral), a. [See POLYHEDRON.] Having many sides, as a solid body. Sometimes written Polyedra, Polyedrous.

Polyhedral (po-li-hē'dri-kal), a. Same as Polyhedral. [Rare.]

Polyhedron (po-li-hē'dron), n. [Gr. polys, many, and hedra, a side.] 1. In geom. a body or solid bounded by many faces or planes. When all the faces are regular polygons similar and equal to each other the solid becomes a regular body. Only five regular solids can exist, namely, the tetrahedron, the hexahedron, the octahedron, the dodecahedron, and the icosahedron. It is sometimes written Polyedron.—2. In optics, a multiplying glass or lens consisting of several plane surfaces disposed in a convex form, through each of which an object is seen; a polyscope.

Polyhedrous (po-li-hē'drus), a. Same as Polyhedral.

Polyhistor (po-li-his'tēr), n. [Gr. polys, much or many, and hístōr, knowing, learned.] A person of great learning; one versed in various studies. 'An experienced polyhistor of infinite reading.' De Quincey.

Polyhymnia (po-li-him'ni-a), n. [L. Polyhymnia, Gr. Polyhymna, from polys, many, and hymnos, a hymn.] Among the Greeks, the Muse of the sublime hymn, and, according to some of the poets, inventress of the lyre, and of mimes and pantomimes. In art she is usually represented as covered with a white mantle, in a meditative attitude, and without any attribute.

Polylog† (po-li-lō'jī), n. [Gr. polys, many, and logos, discourse.] A talking much; talkativeness; garrulity.

Many words (battology or polylogy) are signs of a fool. Granger.

Polyloquent† (po-li-lō'kwent), a. [Gr. polys, many, and L. loquor, to speak.] Talking much; talkative.

Polymath, Polymathist (po'li-math, po-lim'a-thist), n. A man of various learning. 'Those polymathists that stand poring all day in a corner upon a moth-eaten author.' Howell.

Polymathic (po-li-math'ik), a. Pertaining to polymathy. [Rare.]

Polymathy (po-lim'a-thi), n. [Gr. polys, many, and mathēsis, learning, manthano, to learn.] The knowledge of many arts and sciences; acquaintance with many branches of learning or with various subjects. 'That high and excellent learning, which men, for the large extent of it, call polymathy.' Hartlib. [Rare.]

Polymeric (po-li-me'rik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and meros, a part.] In chem. pertaining to or characterized by polymerism; as, butyric acid (C₄H₈O₂) and aldehyde (C₂H₄O) are polymeric.

Polymeride (po-lim'er-id), n. In chem. a compound that exhibits the properties of polymerism with reference to some other compound. See POLYMERISM.

Polymerism (po-lim'er-izm), n. In chem. the character in certain compound bodies, differing in chemical properties, of having the same chemical elements combined in the same proportions but with different molecular weights; thus, butyric acid (C₄H₈O₂) and aldehyde (C₂H₄O) have their elements in the same proportions, but for molecular weights (the atom of carbon being 12, of hydrogen 1, of oxygen 16) we get

See ISOMERISM, METAMERISM.

Polymeric (po-lim'er-us), a. [See POLYMERIC.] 1. Composed of many parts.—2. Pertaining to polymerism.

Polyignite (po-li-mig'nit), n. [Gr. polys, many, and mignymi, to mix.] A mineral which occurs in small prismatic crystals of a metallic lustre. It is found at Fredriksvåg, Norway, and has received its name from the variety of its constituent parts, consisting of titanite acid, zirconia, lime, yttria, oxides of iron, cerium, and manganese, with traces of magnesia, potassa, and silica. It occurs in the form of trimetric crystals, sometimes an inch long, imbedded in felspar and zircon-syenite.

Polyminia (po-lim'ni-a), a. Same as Polyhymnia.

Polyminite (po-lim-nit), n. [Gr. polymnios, full of moss, from polys, much, and union, moss.] A stone marked with dendrites and black lines, and so disposed as to represent rivers, marshes, and ponds.

Polymorphic (po-li-mor'fik), a. Same as Polymorphous.

Polymorphism (po-li-mor'fiz'm), n. The property of being polymorphous or capable of existing in different forms; specifically, in crystal, the property of crystallizing in two or more fundamental forms; thus, carbon crystallizes in octahedral forms in the diamond, and in hexagonal prisms in graphite. When the crystal can assume two forms it is said to be dimorphic, or to present the phenomenon of dimorphism, when three it is said to be trimorphic.

Polymorphous (po-li-mor'fus), a. Having many forms; assuming many forms.

I find it difficult to form any judgment of any author so polymorphous as Herder. De Quincey.

Polyomorphy (poli-mor-fi), n. Same as Polymorphism.

Poly-mountain. Same as Poley-mountain.

Polyneme (po-li-nēm), n. A fish belonging to the genus Polynemus.

Polynemus (po-li-nē'mus), n. [Gr. polys, many, and nēma, a thread.] A genus of acanthopterygian fishes, belonging and giving name to a small family (Polynemidae), distinguished from the Percidae, to which it formerly belonged, by having the ventral fins abdominal instead of thoracic. The species have an oblong form, a compressed head entirely covered with deciduous scales, a blunt, prominent nose, and filiform appendages to the pectoral fins. In one species, known as the paradise-fish (P. paradiseus) or mango-fish, these appendages have some resemblance to the tail-feathers of a bird of paradise. Species of this genus are found on the coast of Africa, in the West Indies, in the Eastern seas, and in the Bay of Bengal. One of the species, P. sele, found plentifully in the latter locality, yields a considerable quantity of isinglass, which is procured from the bladder.

Polynemus quadrifilis (Four-rayed Polyneme).

Polynesian (po-li-nē'zhi-an), a. [Gr. polys, many, and nēsos, an island.] Pertaining to Polynesia, a region of many islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Polynesian (po-li-nē'zhi-an), n. A native or inhabitant of Polynesia.

Polynomial (po-li-nō'mi-al), n. Same as Multinomial.

Polynomial (po-li-nō'mi-al), a. Containing many names or terms; multinomial.

Polyodonta (po-li-lō'don'ta), n. [Gr. polys, many, and odontos, a tooth.] A name applied by Lamarck and Blainville to the arks-shells, &c., of collectors, comprehending the genus Arca of Linnaeus.

Polyommatous (po-li-om'a-tus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and omma, ommatos, the eye.] Many-eyed.

Polyommatus (po-li-om'a-tus), n. A genus of lepidopterous insects, so called from many of the species having numerous eye-like marks on the under side. There are many British species. From their colour being generally blue in the males these pretty little butterflies are commonly called blues.

Polygonomous† (po-li-on'o-mus), a. Same as Polygonymous.

The supreme God amongst the pagans was polygonomous. Cudworth.

Polygonomy (po-li-on'o-mi), n. Same as Polygonymy.

Polygonymous (po-li-on'i-mus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and onoma, a name.] Having many names or titles; many-titled.

Polygonymy (po-li-on'i-mi), n. [Gr. polys, many, and onoma, a name.]

Variety or multiplicity of names for the same object. Brande & Cox.

Polyoptrum, Polyoptron (po-li-op'trum, po-li-op'tron), n. [Gr. polys, many, and root opt, to see.] A glass through which objects appear multiplied but diminished. It consists of a lens, one side of which is plane, but in the other are ground several spherical concavities, each of which becomes a plano-concave lens, through which an object appears diminished.

Polyorama (po-li-o-rā'ma), n. [Gr. polys, many, and orama, a view.] 1. A view of many objects.—2. An optical apparatus presenting many views. See PANORAMA.

Polyp, Polype (po-lip), n. [L. polypus, from Gr. polypus—polys, many, and pous, a foot.] The name given to the members of a class of animals in the Radiata of Cuvier, associated together in virtue of the common character of a conical or cylindrical body, at one end of which is the mouth, surrounded by more or less numerous arms or tentacles, while the other extremity either serves as a sucker to attach the animal to some object, or, being prolonged like a thread down a hollow sheath, connects it with its fellow polyps of the same polypidom, which thus become a compound animal, the whole of whose parts are animated by a common principle of life and growth. As science progressed, however, it was discovered that under this common name were combined animals of various degrees of organization, three classes at least of which have been well ascertained and classified. The Polypi, therefore, had to be given up as a distinct class, and the members, with the exception of the Polyzoa, which were referred to the Mollusca, now form the sub-kingdom Coelenterata, which comprises two classes, Hydrozoa and Actinozoa. (See COELENTERATA, HYDROZOA, HYDRA, ACTINOZOA.) The term polyp, however, is still indiscriminately applied to any of the Coelenterata, but more especially to the hydra or the sea-anemone. The name of zoophytes is also sometimes loosely applied to them.

Polyparous (po-lip'a-rus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and L. pario, to produce.] Producing many; bringing forth a great number.

Polypary (poli-pa-ri), n. The horny or chitinous outer covering or envelope with which many of the Hydrozoa are furnished. The term is also not uncommonly applied to the very similar structure produced by the sea-mats and their allies (Polyzoa). The polypary-producing animals are propagated by budding, and live together in groups or colonies so associated that each group forms a compound animal, whose united coverings form a compound polypary (polypidom), which is their common home, and is at the same time the central stem or stock sustaining the whole. Each individual polyp thus lives in its own proper cavity in the common polypary, from which it protrudes its body, and into which it retracts it at pleasure. Polypoary is used by those who desire to keep polypary for the Actinozoa.

Polypean (po-li-pē-an), a. Of or pertaining to a polyp or a polypus.

Polypetalæ (po-li-pet'a-lē), n. pl. In bot. a term applied to plants with distinct petals, in contradistinction to Gamopetalæ, which have the petals united into a single corolla. Called also Dialypetalæ.

Polypetalous (po-li-pet'al-us), a. [Gr. polys, many, and petalon, a petal.] In bot. having many petals; as, a polypetalous corolla. Called also Dialypetalæ.

Polyphagia (po-li-fa'i-a), n. [Gr. polys, much, many, and phago, to eat.] 1. In med. excessive desire of eating; voracity.—2. The faculty of subsisting on many kinds of food.

Polyphagous (po-li-fa'a-gus), a. [See above.] Eating or subsisting on many things or kinds of food.

Some larvæ (of insects) are polyphagous, or feed upon a variety of plants. Kirby & Spence.

Polyphant† (po-li-fant), n. A musical stringed instrument of the violin kind, used in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

Polypharmacy (po-li-far'ma-si), n. 1. The prescribing of too many medicines.—2. A medicine made up of many ingredients.

Poliphonic (po-li-fon'ik), a. [Gr. polys, phōnos—polys, many, and phōnē, sound.] 1. Having or consisting of many voices or sounds.

The barking crow possesses the most remarkable poliphonic powers. It can shriek, laugh, yell, shout, whistle, scream, and bark. Sat. Rev.

2. In music, consisting of several tone series,

ch, chain; ch, Sc. lock; g, go; j, job;

n, Fr. ton; ng, sing; th, then; th, thin;

w, wig; wh, whig; zh, azure.—See KEY.

or parts, progressing simultaneously according to the rules of counterpoint; contrapuntal; as, a fugue is a polyphonic composition.

Polyphonism (po-lif-on-izm), n. [Gr. polys, many, and phōnē, sound.] 1. Multiplicity of sounds, as in the reverberations of an echo.—2. In music, composition in parts, each part having an independent melody of its own, as contradistinguished from a homophonic composition, which consists of a principal theme, the accompanying parts serving merely to strengthen it.

Polypionist (po-lif-on-ist), n. 1. One who professes the art of multiplying sounds, or who makes a variety of sounds; an imitator of a variety of sounds; a ventriloquist.—2. A master of the art of counterpoint; a contrapuntist.

Polypionous (po-lif-on-us), a. Same as Polypionist.

Polypion (po-lif-on), n. Same as Polypionism.

Polypore (po-li-fōr), n. [Gr. polys, many, and phorōs, to carry.] In bot. a fleshy receptacle with numerous ovaries.

Polyporetic (po-li-fōr-et-ik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and phylē, a clan, a tribe, a family.] Of or pertaining to many tribes or families; specifically, in biol. applied to the hypothesis that all organisms have not their descent from one primordial cell, but from many independent sources of origin; polygenetic.

Polypylous (po-lif-il-lus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and phylon, a leaf.] In bot. many-leaved; as, a polypylous calyx or perianth.

Polypi (po-li-pi), n. pl. See POLYP and POLYPUS.

Polypide (po-li-pid), n. In zool. the separate zooid of a polyzoid.

Polypidom (po-li-pid-om), n. [L. polypus, a polyp, and domus, a house.] The stem or permanent fabric of a colony of zoophytes, around and in which are the cells constituting the abodes of the polyps which fabricate it; the dermal system of a colony of a hydrozoan or polyzoid. In the lime-producing genera the polypidom is coral.

Polypier (po-li-pi-ā), n. [Fr., from polype, a polyp.] The name given to the habitations of polyps, or to the common part of those compound animals called polyps; a polypidom or compound polypary. The name is given also to a single polypary or polyp cell.

Sometimes each polyp has a distinct polypier, but in general it is the common portion of a mass of aggregated polyps which presents the characters peculiar to these bodies, and thus these form aggregated polypiers, the volume of which may become very considerable, although each of its constituent parts has dimensions which are very small.

Milne Edwards.

Polypifera, Polypiphora (po-li-pif-er-ā), n. [L. polypus, and fero, to bear.] A class of Cuvier's Radiata, consisting of soft aquatic animals of a plant-like form. Called also Polypit. See POLYP.

Polypiferous (po-li-pif-er-us), a. Pertaining or belong to the Polypifera; producing polyps.

Polypiparous (po-li-pip-a-rus), a. [L. polypus, a polyp, and pario, to produce.] Producing polyps.

Polypite (po-li-pit), n. 1. The fundamental element in the structure of a hydrozoan. It is a single zooid, consisting essentially of a sac having at one end an ingestive or oral opening, which leads into a digestive cavity. The wall of the sac is composed of two cellular membranes, the outer of which is termed the ectoderm and the inner the endoderm. Between these two layers a third layer—the mesoderm—may be developed. Called also Hydranth.—2. A fossil polyp.

Polyplectron, Polyplectrum (po-li-plek-t'ron, po-li-plek-trum), n. [Gr. polys, many, and plektron, an instrument used for striking the strings of a lyre.] An obsolete musical instrument played upon in the manner of a pianoforte.

Polypode (po-li-pōd), n. [Gr. polys, many, and pous, podos, a foot.] 1. An animal having many feet; the milliped or wood-louse. 2. In bot. a member of the family Polypodiaceae; a polypode. See POLYPODIUM.

Polypodiaceae (po-li-pō-di-ā-sē-ē), n. pl. [See POLYPODIUM.] A nat. order of ferns, which may be taken as the type of the whole. They constitute the highest order of acrogenous or cryptogamic vegetation, and are regarded as approaching more nearly to cycadaceous gymnosperms than to any other part of the vegetable kingdom. They are usually herbaceous plants with a permanent stem, which either remains buried or rooted beneath the soil, or creeps over the stems of trees, or forms a scarcely movable point of growth, round which new leaves are annually produced in a circle, or it rises into the air in the form of a simple stem, bearing a tuft of leaves at its apex (as Cyathea arborea), and sometimes attaining the height of 40 feet, as in the tree-ferns. The chief distinguishing feature consists in the presence of an elastic jointed ring nearly surrounding the spore-cases.

Polypodiaceous (po-li-pō-di-ā-shus), a. Of or pertaining to the Polypodiaceae.

Polypodium (po-li-pō-di-um), n. [L., from Gr. polys, many, and pous, podos, a foot, from its numerous root-like feet.] A genus of cryptogamic plants or ferns, belonging to the nat. order Polypodiaceae. The fructifications are in roundish points, scattered over the inferior disk of the frond or leaf. There are numerous species, of which four are enumerated by British botanists.

Polypody (po-li-pō-di), n. A fern of the genus Polypodium or nat. order Polypodiaceae.

Polypogon (po-li-pō-gon), n. [From Gr. polys, many, and pogon, a beard.] A handsome genus of grasses with densely contracted usually hairy panicles, extending from Western France to Central Asia. There are two British species, known by the name of beard-grass.

Polypoid (po-li-pōid), a. [Polyp, and Gr. eidos, likeness.] Resembling a polyp.

These remarkable structures (the filiform capsules) . . . are found to exist very extensively throughout the entire group of polypoid organisms.

Rymer Jones.

Polyporite (po-li-pō-rīt), n. In geol. a fungus-like organism resembling Polyporus versicolor.

Polyporous (po-li-pō-rus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and poros, a passage, an interstice, a pore.] Having many pores.

Polyporus (po-li-pō-rus), n. [Gr. polys, many, and poros, a pore; the under surface being full of pores.] A genus of parasitical fungi. The P. destructor is one of the pests of wooden constructions, producing what is sometimes termed dry-rot, although the true dry-rot is a different plant (Merulius lacrymans). P. igniarius is known by the name of amadou, touch-wood, or spunk; P. fomentarius, by the name of amadou or German tinder; P. officinalis is the larchagaric, formerly employed as a drastic purgative.

Polypous (po-li-pus), a. [From polypus.] Having the nature of the polypus; having many feet or roots, like the polypus. 'Polypous concretions.' Arbutnot.

Polypragmatic, Polypragmatical (po-li-prag-mat'ik, po-li-prag-mat'ik-al), a. Over-busy; forward; officious. 'Polypragmatical inquirers.' Heywood. [Rare.]

Polypragmaty (po-li-prag-ma-ti), n. [Gr. polys, many or much, and pragmatia, business, from pragma, thing done, from prassō, to do.] The state of being over-engaged in business or affairs. [Rare.]

Polyprismatic (po-li-priz-mat'ik), a. [Gr. polys, many, and E. prismatic.] In mineral, having crystals presenting numerous prisms in a single form.

Polyp-stock (po-li-pō-stok), n. Same as Polypary.

Polypteridæ (po-li-pet-er-idē), n. pl. [Gr. polys, many, pteron, a feather, a fin, and eidos, likeness.] The fin-fishes, a family of fishes constituting the living representatives of numerous fossil species of voracious ganoid fishes occurring in the Palæozoic strata, such as Megalichthys, Holopterychius, &c. Their most singular characteristic is the structure of the dorsal fin, which, instead of being continuous, is separated into twelve or sixteen strong spines distributed along the back, each bordered behind by a small soft fin. There is but one genus (Polypterus), consisting of two known species, one inhabiting the Nile and the other the Senegal.

Polypterus (po-li-pet-er-us), n. [Gr. polys, many, and pteron, a fin.] A genus of acanthopterygious fishes, distinguished by a continued series of small dorsal fins running along the whole length of the back. One species inhabits the Nile, and is called by the Egyptians bichir. See POLYPTERIDÆ.

Polyptoton (po-li-pō-tōn), n. [Gr. polyp-tōtos, polyptōton, having or being in many cases—polys, many, and ptōsis, a case.] In rhet. a form of speech in which a word is repeated in different cases, numbers, genders, and the like. The following line is an example:—

My own heart's heart, and ownest own, farewell.
Tennyson.

Polyptychodon (po-li-ptik'o-don), n. [Gr. polys, many, ptychē, a fold, and odous, odontos, a tooth.] A cretaceous genus of enaliosaurs or sea-lizards, so called from the many ridged or folded character of the enamel of their teeth, which were the parts first discovered. Portions of the cranium, ribs, vertebrae, &c., have since been found, all proving the existence of a huge carnivorous saurian having affinities to the plesiosauroid type. Page.

Polypus (po-li-pus), *n. pl. Polypi (po-li-pi). 1. Same as Polyp.—2. In pathol. any kind of pedunculated tumour attached to a surface, to which it is supposed to adhere like a many-footed animal. Polypi have usually their seat in the mucous membrane, especially that of the nostrils and uterus.*

Polyrhizous (po-li-rhiz-us), a. [Gr. polys, many, and rhiza, a root.] In bot. possessing numerous rootlets independently of those by which the attachment is effected.

Polyschematist (po-li-skēm'a-tist), a. [Gr. polys, many, and schēma, form, manner.] Characterized by or existing in many forms or fashions.

Polyscope (po-li-skōp), n. [Gr. polys, many, and skopeō, to view.] In optics, a lens plane on one side and convex on the other, but of which the convex side is formed of several plane surfaces or facettes, so that an object seen through it appears multiplied.

Polysepalous (po-li-sepal-us), a. [Gr. polys, many, and E. sepal.] In bot. a term applied to a calyx which has its sepals separate from each other.

Polyspast (po-li-spast), n. [L. polyspaston, from Gr. polys, many, and spasō, to draw.] 1. A machine consisting of many pulleys for raising heavy weights: a term used by old writers on mechanics.—2. An apparatus of the same character used formerly in surgery to reduce dislocations.

Polysperm (po-li-spērm), n. [Gr. polys, many, and sperma, seed.] A tree whose fruit contains many seeds. Evelyn.

Polyspermal, Polyspermous (po-li-spēr-mal, po-li-spēr-mus), a. Containing many seeds; as, a polyspermous capsule or berry.

Polysporous (po-li-spō-rus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and sporos, a spore.] In bot. having many spores.

Polystome (po-li-stōm), a. [Gr. polys, many, and stoma, a mouth.] In zool. having many mouths: applied to certain animals among the Protozoa.

Polystyle (po-li-stil), n. [Gr. polys, many, and stylos, a column.] In arch. an edifice in which there are many columns; a court surrounded by several rows of columns, as in Moorish architecture.

Polysyllabic (po-li-sil-lab'ik), a. Pertaining to a polysyllable; consisting of many syllables, or of more than three.

Polysyllabical (po-li-sil-lab'ik-al), a. Same as Polysyllabic.

Polysyllabicism, Polysyllabism (po-li-sil-lab'i-sizm, po-li-sil-a-bizm), n. The state or quality of being polysyllabic, or of having many syllables.

Polysyllable (po-li-sil-la-bl), n. [Gr. polys, many, and syllabē, a syllable.] A word of many syllables, that is, consisting of four or more syllables, words of from one to three being called monosyllables, dissyllables, and trisyllables.

Polysyndeton (po-li-sin-de-ton), n. [Gr. polysyndeton—polys, many, and syndetos, connecting, from syndeō, to connect—syn, together, and deō, to bind.] A figure of rhetoric by which the copulative is often repeated, as in the sentence, 'We have ships and men and money and stores.'

Polysynthesis (po-li-sin-thē-sis), n. [Gr. polys, many, and synthesis.] Polysynthetic character or structure; polysyntheticism.

Polysynthetic, Polysynthetical (po-li-sin-thet'ik, po-li-sin-thet'ik-al), a. [Gr. polys, many, and synthesis, a putting together. See SYNTHESIS.] In philol. forming a complex whole compounded of several words or sentence elements aggregated together in a peculiar union; as, a polysynthetic word; characterized by such compounds; as, a polysynthetic language. The term was first applied by Du Ponceau to the class of languages spoken by the Indian tribes of America.

Polysyntheticism (po-li-sin-thet'i-sizm), n. Same as Polysynthesis.

Fâte, fâr, fat, fâll; mē, met, hér; pine, pin; nôte, not, möve; tûbe, tub, bull; oil, pound; ü, Sc. abune; ý, Sc. fey.

Polytechnic, Polytechnical (po-li-tek'nik, po-li-tek'ni-kal), a. [Gr. polys, many, and technē, art.] Denoting or comprehending many arts; specifically, denoting an educational institution (such as the famous polytechnic school of Paris) in which instruction is given in many arts, more particularly with reference to their practical application.

Polytechnic (po-li-tek'nik), n. A name sometimes given to an exhibition of objects belonging to the industrial arts and manufactures. The Polytechnic was a famous establishment of somewhat similar kind in London.

Polytechnics (po-li-tek'niks), n. The science of the mechanical arts, aided or unaided by machinery.

Polythalamacea (po'li-thal-a-mā'shē-a), n. pl. [See POLYTHALAMOUS.] An order of cephalopods, including those which inhabit many-chambered cells. It embraces the families Nautilidae, Ammonitidae, Spirulidae, and Belemnitidae.

Polythalamia (po'li-tha-lā'mi-a), n. pl. [Gr. polys, many, and thalamos, a chamber.] An order of compound Protozoa occupying compound chambered cells of microscopic size. In some instances each cell of the common shell presents only one external opening, but more commonly it is punctured with numerous minute pores or foramina, through which the animal can protrude filaments. Their remains constitute the bulk of the chalk and tertiary limestone.

Polythalamous (po-li-tha'lā-mus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and thalamos, a chamber.] Having many cells or chambers; as, the polythalamous shells of the Foraminifera; multilocular; camerated.

Polytheism (po'li-thē-izm), n. [Fr. polythéisme—Gr. polys, many, and theos, god.] The doctrine of a plurality of gods or invisible beings superior to man, and having an agency in the government of the world.

The first author of polytheism, Orpheus, did plainly assert one supreme God. Stillinger.

Polytheist (po'li-thē-ist), n. A person who believes in or maintains the doctrine of a plurality of gods.

The emperor indeed himself, though a polytheist, was very little of an idolater. Sharpe.

Polytheistic, Polytheistical (po'li-thē-ist'ik, po'li-thē-ist'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to polytheism; as, polytheistic belief or worship.

In all polytheistic religions among savages, as well as in the early ages of heathen antiquity, it is the irregular events of nature only that are ascribed to the agency and power of the gods. Adam Smith.

2. Holding a plurality of gods; as, a polytheistic writer.

Polytheistically (po'li-thē-ist'ik-al-ly), adv. In the manner of a polytheist or of polytheism.

Polytheize (po'li-thē-iz), v. i. To adhere to, advocate, or inculcate the doctrine of polytheism; to believe in a plurality of gods. Milman.

Polytymous (po-lit'o-mus), a. [Gr. polys, many, and tomē, a cutting, from temno, to cut.] In bot. a term applied to leaves subdivided into many distinct subordinate parts, which, however, not being jointed to the petiole, are not true leaflets.

Polytypage (po'li-tip-āj), n. A peculiar mode of stereotyping by which facsimiles of wood-engravings, &c., are produced in metal, from which impressions may be taken as from types. See POLYTYPE.

Polytype (po'li-tip), n. [Gr. polys, many, and typos, type.] A cast or facsimile of an engraving, matter in type, &c., produced by polytypage. By pressing a wood-cut into semi-fluid metal an intaglio matrix is produced; and from this matrix, in a similar way, a polytype in relief is obtained.

Polytype (po'li-tip), a. Pertaining to polytypage; produced by polytypage.

Polytype (po'li-tip), v. t. To produce by polytypage; as, to polytype an engraving.

Polyzoa (po-li-zō'a), n. pl. [Gr. polys, many, and zōon, an animal.] A class of animals forming the lowest members of the Mollusca, and generally known by the popular names of 'sea-mosses' and 'sea-mats.' They are invariably compound, forming associated growths or colonies produced by gemmation from a single primordial individual, and inhabit a polyzoarium, corresponding to the polypidom of the composite hydroids. The typical polypide of a polyzoan differs from the polypide of the Hydrozoa in having a distinct alimentary canal suspended freely in a body cavity, and in having the reproductive organs contained within the body. The body is inclosed in a double-walled sac, the outer layer (ectocyst) of which is chitinous or calcareous, and the inner (endocyst) a delicate membranous layer. All the Polyzoa are hermaphrodite. Besides true sexual reproduction, and besides the power of producing colonies by continuous budding, fresh individuals are in many cases produced by a process of discontinuous gemmation. The Polyzoa are chiefly marine, encrusting stones, old shells, and sea-weeds; but some are fresh-water. Called also Bryozoa.

Polyzoan (po-li-zō'an), a. A member of the Polyzoa; a polyzoan.

Polyzoarium, Polyzoary (po'li-zō-ā'ri-um, po-li-zō'a-ri), n. [See POLYZOA.] In zool. the dermal system of the colony of a polyzoan; a polypidom. See POLYPIDOM.

Polyzoary (po-li-zō'a-ri), n. Same as Polyzoarium.

Polyzonal (po-li-zō'n'al), a. [Gr. polys, many, and zōnē, a zone or belt.] Lit. composed of many zones or belts; a term applied by Sir D. Brewster to burning lenses composed of pieces united in rings. Lenses of a large size are constructed on this principle for lighthouses, as they can be obtained freer from defects and have but slight spherical aberration.

Polyzoon (po-li-zō'on), n. A mollusc of the class Polyzoa.

Pomace (pom'ās), n. [From Latin pomum, an apple, Fr. pomme.] The substance of apples or of similar fruit crushed by grinding.

Pomaceæ, Pomeæ (pō-mā'shē-ē, pō-mē'), n. pl. [From L. pomum, an apple.] That division of the nat. order Rosaceæ to which the apple, pear, quince, and medlar belong. It differs from Rosaceæ proper in having an inferior ovary.

Pomaceous (pō-mā'shus), a. 1. Consisting of apples. 'Pomaceous harvests breathing sweets.' Philips.—2. Like pomace.

Pomade (pō-mād'), n. [Fr. pommade, from L. pomum, an apple. Originally the ointment was prepared from apples.] Perfumed ointment, especially ointment for the hair; pomatum.

Pomander (pō'man-dēr), n. [Fr. pomme d'ambre, apple or ball of amber.] A perfume ball, or a mixture of perfumes, formerly carried in the pocket or suspended from the neck or the girdle.

I have sold all my trumpery; not a counterfeit stone, not a ribbon, glass, pomander, brooch, table-book, balaid, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tie, bracelet, hornring, to keep my pack from fasting. Shak.

Your only way to make a good pomander is this. Take an ounce of the purest garden mould, cleanse and steeped seven days in change of motherless rose-water; then take the best labdanum, benjoin, both storaxes, ambergris, civet, and musk. Incorporate them together and work them into what form you please. This, if your breath be not too valiant, will make you smell as sweet as my lady's dog. Lingua, old play (1607).

Pomard (pō-mār'), n. A fine wine made from grapes grown near Pomard, a village of France in the department of Côte-d'Or.

Pomatum (pō-mā'tum), n. [From L. pomum, an apple. See POMADE.] A perfumed unguent or composition used in dressing the hair; pomade. It is also used in medicine as an external application.

Pomatium (pō-mā'tum), v. t. and i. To apply pomatum to the hair.

Pome (pōm), n. [L. pomum, an apple.] 1. In bot. a fleshy or pulpy pericarp without valves, containing a capsule or capsules, as the apple, pear, &c.—2. In the R. Cath. Ch. a ball of precious metal filled with hot water, and placed on the altar during the winter months, to prevent accidents with the elements from the hands of the priest becoming numb with cold.

Pomet (pōm), v. i. [Fr. pommer, to form a head, from pomme, an apple.] To grow to a head, or form a head in growing.

Pomecitron (pōm'sit-ron), n. [Pome and citron.] A citron apple. 'Apricots, limons, pomecitrons, and such like.' B. Jonson.

Porcelain (pör'sē-län), n. [Fr. porcelaine, from It. porcellana, meaning first a certain shell (the Venus shell), then the nacre of the shell, and lastly porcelain; from L. porcella, a pig (a dim. from porca, a hog), from some fancied resemblance between the shell and a pig.] The finest species of pottery ware, originally manufactured in China and Japan, but now made in Europe and America. It is formed only from the finest clays united with siliceous earths capable of communicating to them a certain degree of translucency by means of their vitrification. The best English porcelain is made from a mixture of Cornish and Devonshire china-clay or kaolin (see KAOLIN), ground flints, ground Cornish stone, and calcined bones in powder, besides some other materials according to the fancy of the manufacturer. The glaze consists of ground felspar or Cornish stone. The manufacture was first introduced to Europe in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but it was not until after the middle of the eighteenth that it reached any importance in this country. English porcelain has now been brought to a great state of perfection, owing chiefly to the genius and enterprise of Josiah Wedgwood of Staffordshire, in which county the chief potteries still are.

Porcelain (pör'sē-län), a. Belonging to or consisting of porcelain.

Porcelain (pör'sē-län), n. The plant called purslain (which see).

entrance. See PORT.] 1. In arch. an exterior appendage to a building forming a covered approach or vestibule to a doorway. The porches in some of the older churches are of two stories, having an upper apartment, to which the name parvis is sometimes applied.—2. A covered walk or portico.

Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.

Shak.

—The Porch, a public portico in Athens, where Zeno, the philosopher, taught his disciples. It was called poikilé, the painted porch, from the pictures of Polygnotus and other eminent painters with which it was adorned. Hence, the Porch is equivalent to the school of the Stoics.

Porcine (pôr'sin), a. [L. porcinus, from porcus. See PORK.] 1. Pertaining to swine; as, the porcine species of animals.—2. Like a sow; hog-like.

His large porcine cheeks, round, twinkling eyes, and thumbs habitually twirling, expressed a concentrated effort not to get into trouble. George Eliot.

Porcupine (pôr'ku-pin), n. [O. Fr. porc-épine, lit. the spinous hog or spine-hog; from L. porcus, a pig, and spina, a spine or thorn. So in Mod. Fr. porc-épic, the spike-hog; G. stachelschwein, thorn-swine; Sw. pinssvin, Dan. pinsvin, pin-swine.] A quadruped of the family Hystriidae, belonging to the order Rodentia, distinguished from the other rodents by having the body covered with long spines mixed with bristly hairs. The crested or common porcupine (Hystrix cristata), which inhabits Italy and Africa, has a body about 2 feet in length, four toes on each of the forefeet, and five on each of the hind-feet, a crested head, a short tail, and the upper lip divided like that of the hare. The body is covered with spines, prickles, or quills which are very sharp, and some of them 9 or 10 inches long; these the animal can erect at pleasure. When attacked, he rolls his body into a round form, in which position the prickles are presented in every direction to the enemy. The Canada porcupine is the Erethizon dorsata, the prehensile porcupine the E. prehensilis, found in South America. It inhabits wood, and occasionally clings to the branches of trees by its tail. Two species of tufted tailed porcupines, forming the genus Atherura, are found in various parts of Asia and the Eastern Archipelago. The spines are flattened like as many blades of grass, instead of resembling the round bamboo-like form of those of the common porcupine.

Porcupine-fish (pôr'ku-pin-fish), n. A prickly fish, the Diodon Hystrix. See DIODON.

Porcupine-grass (pôr'ku-pin-gras), n. An excessively spiny grass (Tridax irritans), covering large areas in Australia; spinifex.

Porcupine-wood (pôr'ku-pin-wud), n. The wood of the cocoa-nut palm, which is very hard, durable, and when cut horizontally having beautiful markings resembling those of porcupine spines.

Pore (pôr), n. [Fr. pore, from L. porus, Gr. poros, a passage, a pore, from peiro, to pierce or pass through.] 1. A small opening or orifice in a solid body, especially one of the minute openings on the surface of different membranes of plants and animals, through which fluids and minute substances are excreted or exhaled from the circulation, or by which they are absorbed and caused to enter the circulation. The former class are called exhalant pores, and the latter absorbent pores.

The sweat came gushing out of every pore.

Chapman.

2. One of the small interstices between the particles or molecules of matter which compose bodies. There are many considerations which prove that all bodies, even the densest, are porous, or are composed of molecules not in absolute contact, but separated from each other by intervals, which, though so small as to be inappreciable by the senses, have nevertheless a magnitude considerable in respect of the molecules themselves.

Pore (pôr), v.i. pret. pored; ppr. poring. [O.E. pourre, to gaze steadily (Chaucer): origin uncertain; possibly same as pour.] To look with steady continued attention or application; to read or examine anything with steady perseverance: generally followed by on (upon) or over. The word seems to be usually limited in its application to the slow patient reading or examination of books, or something written or engraved. 'Painfully to pore upon a book.' Shak.

With sharpened sight pale antiquaries pore. Pope.

Porgy (pôr'gi), n. [Of Indian origin.] The popular name of a fish belonging to the genus Sparus. It is common in the waters of New England and New York, and is much esteemed for food. Written also Poggy and Paugie. [United States.]

Porifera (pô-rif'ér-a), n. pl. [L. porus, a pore, and fero, to bear.] An order of the Protozoa, including the marine and freshwater sponges. It is sometimes regarded as a separate class. More commonly termed Spongia, Spongida, Spongie. (See SPONGE.) They are by Haeckel and others classed with the corals as Actinozoa.

Poriferan (pô-rif'ér-an), n. A member of the class Porifera.

Poriform (pôr'i-form), a. [L. porus, a pore, and forma, a shape.] Resembling a pore; specifically applied in bot. to a nectary when of that appearance, as that of the hyacinth, which has three similar pores in the germen.

Porime (pôr'im), n. [Gr. porimos, practicable.] In geom. a sort of lemma or theorem, so obvious or self-evident as to differ but little from an axiom or self-evident proposition.

Poriness (pôr'i-nes), n. The state of being pory or having numerous pores.

Porism (pôr'izm), n. [Gr. porismos, acquisition, from porizo, to gain, from poros, a passing.] In geom. (a) a corollary. (b) A proposition affirming the possibility of finding such conditions as will render a certain problem indeterminate or capable of innumerable solutions. It is not a theorem, nor a problem, or rather it includes both. It asserts that a certain problem may become indeterminate, and so far it partakes of the nature of a theorem, and in seeking to discover the conditions by which this may be effected it partakes of the nature of a problem.

Porismatic, Porismatical (pô-riz-mat'ik, pô-riz-mat'ik-al), a. Same as Poristic.

Poristic, Poristical (pôr-is'tik, pô-ris'tik-al), a. Pertaining to a porism.

Porite (pôr'it), n. A coral of certain species having the surface covered with minute shallow pores or cells.

Pork (pôr'k), n. [Fr. porc; from L. porcus, a swine, a pig.] 1. The flesh of swine, fresh or salted, used for food.—2. † A hog; hence, a disgusting, stupid, obstinate, or ignorant person.

I mean not to dispute philosophy with this pork who never read any. Milton.

Pork-butcher (pôr'k-buch-ér), n. One who kills pigs or who deals in pork.

Pork-chop (pôr'k-chop), n. A slice from the rib of a pig. Sinamonas.

Pork-eater (pôr'k-ét-ér), n. One who feeds on swine's flesh.

If we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money. Shak.

Porker (pôr'k'ér), n. A hog; a pig; especially one fed for pork. 'The fat porkers slept beneath the sun.' Pope.

Porket (pôr'k'et), n. A young hog. Dryden.

Porphyret (pôr'fir), n. Porphyry. Locke.

Porphyrio (pôr'fir-i-ô), n. [Gr. porphyra, purple.] A genus of birds of the rail family, including the P. hyacinthinus (purple or hyacinthine gallinule), a bird found in Europe, Asia, and Africa, and remarkable for the stoutness of its beak and the length of its legs. It feeds on seeds and other hard substances, and lives in the neighbourhood of water, its long toes enabling it to run over the aquatic plants with great facility. It is about 18 inches long, of a beautiful blue colour, the bill and feet red.

Porphyritic (pôr-fi-rit'ik), a. [See PORPHYRY.] Resembling porphyry; containing porphyry; composed of a compact homogeneous rock in which distinct crystals or grains of felspar or some other minerals are embedded; as, porphyritic granite; porphyritic greenstone.

Porphyritical (pôr-fi-rit'ik-al), a. Same as Porphyritic.

Porphyritization (pôr'fir-iz-â'shon), n. The act of porphyritizing, or the state of being porphyritized.

Porphyry (pôr'fir-iz), v.t. pret. & pp. porphyritized; ppr. porphyritizing. To cause to resemble porphyry; to make spotted in its composition.

Porphyrogenetic (pôr'fi-rô-je-net'ik), a. [Porphyry, and Gr. gennao, to generate.] Producing or generating porphyry.

Porphyrogenitism (pôr'fi-rô-je-net'izm), n. [See below.] The principle of succession in royal families, especially in the families of the Eastern Roman emperors, in accordance with which a younger son, if born in the purple, that is, after the succession of his parents to the throne, was preferred to an older son who was not.

Henry the porphyrogenitus, though a younger son relatively to Otho, was the eldest son of royal blood, first-born after the succession of Duke Henry to the throne of Charlemagne, the first-born of Henry, king of Germany. The doctrine of porphyrogenitism, congenial to popular sentiment, and not without some foundation in principle, prevailed influentially and widely in many countries and through many ages.

Sir F. Palgrave.

Porphyrogenitus (por'f'i-rō-jen'ti-tus), n. [L. porphyra, purple, and genitus, begot, born.] A title given, especially by the Romans of the Eastern Empire, to such of the sovereign's sons as were born after his accession to the throne. See PORPHYROGENITISM.

Porphyry (por'f'i-ri), n. [Fr. porphyre, Fr. porfiri, from Gr. porphyrites, lit. a purple-coloured rock, from porphra, purple.] 1. Originally, the name given to a very hard stone, partaking of the nature of granite, susceptible of a fine polish, and consequently much used for sculpture. In the fine arts it is known as Rosso Antiquo, and by geologists as Red Syenitic Porphyry. It consists of a homogeneous felspathic base or matrix, having crystals of rose-coloured felspar, called oligoclase, with some plates of blackish hornblende, and grains of oxidized iron ore imbedded, giving to the mass a speckled complexion. It is of a red, or rather of a purple and white colour, more or less variegated, the shade being of all gradations, from violet to a claret colour. Egypt and the East furnish this material in abundance. It also abounds in Minorca, where it is of a red lead colour, variegated with black, white, and green. Pale red porphyry, variegated with black, white, and green, is found in separate nodules in Germany, England, and Ireland. The art of cutting porphyry as practised by the ancients appears to be now quite lost.—2. In geol. any unstratified or igneous rock in which detached crystals of felspar or some other mineral are diffused through a base of other mineral composition. Strictly speaking, however, the term ought to be restricted to such rocks as have a felspathic basis. The varieties of porphyry are known as felspar porphyry, claystone porphyry, porphyritic granite, and porphyritic greenstone.

Porphyry-shell (por'f'i-ri-shel), n. A shell of the genus Murex. From one species of this genus was formerly obtained a liquor that produced the Tyrian purple.

Porpice† (por'pis), n. pl. Porpoises.

Wallowing porpice sport and lord it in the food.

Drayton.

Porpoise (por'pois), n. [O.E. porpisc, porpesc, porpesc, porpus, &c., lit. swine-fish, from L. porcus, a pig or swine, and piscis, a fish. Comp. Gr. meer-schwein, D. marswin, lit. sea-swine.] A cetaceous mammal of the genus Phocaena, of which about five species are known. The common porpoise (P. communis) is the most familiar and smallest of all Cetacea, rarely exceeding 5 feet in length. The head is blunt, and not produced into a projecting muzzle; the body is thick toward the head, but more slender toward the tail. The porpoise frequents the North Sea, and is frequently seen off our shores. It feeds almost entirely on fish, which its numerous equal and interlocking teeth are admirably adapted to catch, and herds of porpoises pursue the vast shoals of herring, mackerel, &c., into bays and estuaries.

Porporino (por-pō-r'no), n. [It.] An alloy of quicksilver, tin, and sulphur, constituting a yellow powder, used by artists in the middle ages in place of gold.

Porpus† (por'pus), n. Same as Porpoise.

Then I drag a bloated corpus,
Swell'd with a dropsy like a porpus. Swift.

Porrect (po-rekt'), a. [L. porrigo, to extend.] In zool. a term applied to a part which extends forth horizontally, as if to meet something.

Porrection† (po-rek'shon), n. [L. porrectio, porrigo—por, forward, and rego, to direct.] The act of stretching forth.

Porret (por'ret), n. [O.Fr. porrette, It. porretta, from L. porrum, a leek.] A scallion; a leek or small onion.

Porridge (por'ij), n. [Perhaps from L. porrum, porrus, a leek, and meaning originally leek soup or broth; but more probably a corruption of potage. Comp. porringer, and Sc. carriches for E. catechism.] 1. A kind of food made by boiling vegetables in water with or without meat; broth; soup; potage. 'Pray a mouth with mutton and porridge.' Shak.—2. A kind of food made by slowly stirring oatmeal, or other similar substance, amongst water or milk while boiling till a thickened mass is formed.

Porridge-pot (por'ij-pot), n. The pot in which porridge is cooked.

Porrito (po-r'igo), n. [L.] Scald-head; scurf or scall in the head. It is principally characterized by an eruption of pustules, unaccompanied by fever. There are several varieties, some of which affect other parts of the body, and some are contagious.

Porringer (por'in-jér), n. [From porridge, the form having been suggested by Fr. potager, a soup-can. The n has intruded as in messenger.] 1. A porridge-dish; a small earthenware or tin vessel out of which children eat their food.

And often after sunset, sir,
When it is light and fair,
I take my little porringer,
And eat my supper there. Wordsworth.

2. † A head-dress in the shape of a porringer: in contempt.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit . . . rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Shak.

Port (pört), n. [A. Sax. port, a port, harbour, from L. portus, a haven; akin to porta, a gate. See below. Port is one of the six words recognized as taken into the language directly from the speech of the Roman invaders. In addition to being a common noun it enters into many place-names, as Portland, Portsmouth, Bridport. For other words adopted directly from invaders, see STREET.] A natural or artificial harbour; a haven; any bay, cove, inlet, or recess of the sea, or of a lake, or the mouth of a river, which vessels can enter, and where they can lie safe from injury by storms. In a legal sense, a port is a place where persons and merchandise are allowed to pass into and out of the realm; a place where there is a constant resort of vessels for the purpose of loading and unloading, with provision made for enabling them to do so. In this sense, therefore, the term is not synonymous with harbour.—Port admiral, the admiral commanding at a naval port.—Port of entry, a port where a custom-house is established for the entry of goods.—Free port, a port open and free for merchants of all nations to load or unload their vessels in, without paying any duty or customs.—Free port is also a term used for a total exemption and franchise which any set of merchants enjoy for goods imported into a state, or those of the growth of the country exported by them.—Close port, open port. See under CLOSE.

Port (pört), n. [L. porta, a gate, from same root as Gr. poros, a passage, and perao, Skr. par, to pass through, and L. per, through. See also FARE.] 1. A gate; an entrance.

From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issued. Milton.

2. Naut. a passage-way in the side of a ship; an embrasure or opening in the side of a ship of war, through which cannon are discharged; a port-hole; also, the covering of such an opening. In merchant ships, ports are square holes cut in the sides, bow, or stern of the vessel for loading and discharging timber cargoes, and other similar purposes.—Air ports, ports for the admission of air; called also Air Scuttles. Those in the sides are called ballast ports, being commonly used for taking in ballast. The ports in the bow or stern are called raft ports.—Bridge ports, ports cut in a vessel's counter by which hawsers are taken out.—Light port, an opening provided with a glazed lid or side-light. See ROW-PORT.—3. An aperture for the passage of steam or a fluid. In steam-engines, ports are two passages leading to the inside of the cylinder, and by means of which the steam enters and returns above and below the piston; the former is called the steam port, the latter the exhaust port. The term port is also applied to similar openings for any fluid, as air, water, &c.

Port (pört), v.t. [Fr. porter, from L. portare, to carry, as in export, import, &c.; same root as E. fare.] 1. † To bear; to carry; to convey. Fuller.—2. To carry in military fashion; to carry a weapon, such as a rifle, in a slanting direction, upwards towards the left, and across the body in front, as in the military command 'to port arms.'

With ported spears, as thick as when a field
Of Ceres, ripe for harvest, waving bends
Her bearded grove of ears. Milton.

Port (pört), n. [Fr. port, carriage, demeanour, from porter, L. porto, to carry.] 1. Carriage; air; mien; manner of movement or walk; demeanour; external appearance; as, a proud port; the port of a gentleman. 'Assume the port of Mars.' Shak.

With more terrific port
Thou walkest. Philips.

2. † State; standing; position.

Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead,
Keep house, and port, and servants as I should. Shak.

SYN. Air, mien, bearing, carriage, demeanour, behaviour, deportment.

Port (pört), n. [Etyim. uncertain.] Naut. the larboard or left side of a ship, as in the phrases 'the ship heels to port,' 'hard port.' The left side of the ship was called port by Admiralty order, in preference to the old larboard, as less mistakable in sound for starboard.

Port (pört), v.t. and i. [From the above noun.] Naut. to turn or put to the left or larboard side of a ship: said of the helm; as, port the helm; he ordered him to port.

Port (pört), n. [From Oporto, whence it is shipped.] A kind of wine made in Portugal. See PORT-WINE.

Claret is the liquor for boys, port for men; but he who aspires to be a hero must drink brandy. Johnson.

These circles cut the equator into twelve equal parts.—Angle of position, (a) of a heavenly body, the angle contained by two great circles passing through the body; the one a secondary to the equator, and the other a secondary to the ecliptic. (b) Of a place on the earth, the angle contained at any place by its meridian, and the great circle passing through that place and any other place.—Geometry of position, a species of geometry the object of which is to investigate and determine the relation that exists between the position of the different parts of a geometrical figure with regard to each other, or with regard to some determinate line or figure first fixed upon as a term of comparison.—Guns of position. See under GUN.—SYN. Situation, station, place, condition, attitude, posture, proposition, assertion, thesis.

Positional (pō-zish-on-al), a. Respecting position. Sir T. Browne.

Positive (poz'i-tiv), a. [Fr. positif; L.L. positivus, from L. pono, positum, to set or place. See POSITION-1.] 1. Properly, laid down; expressed; direct; explicit: opposed to implied; as, he told us in positive words; we have his positive declaration to the fact; the testimony is positive.—2. Not admitting any condition or discretion; absolute; express; as, the commands of the admiral are positive.—3. Absolute; real; existing in fact: opposed to negative; as, positive good, which exists by itself, whereas negative good is merely the absence of evil: or opposed to relative or arbitrary, as, beauty is not a positive thing, but depends on the different tastes of people.—4. Direct; express: opposed to circumstantial; as, positive proof. 5. Confident; fully assured; as, the witness is very positive that he is correct in his testimony.—6. Dogmatic; over-confident in opinion or assertion.

Some positive persisting foes we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always so.

Pope.

7. Settled by arbitrary appointment; prescribed by express enactment: opposed to natural or inbred.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally; that which is positive, not so. . . . Although no laws but positive are mutable, yet all are not mutable which are positive.

Hooker.

8. Based on phenomena; real; phenomenal; realizable; demonstrable; distinctly ascertained or ascertainable: opposed to speculative. 'The assertion that science is the only truth that is positive.' Cardinal Manning.

Nothing can be juster than the law which Comte has formulated. First the theological stage, then the metaphysical, then the positive.

Rev. J. B. Brown.

9. Having power to act directly; having direct influence; as, a positive voice in legislation.

10. In photog. having the lights and shades rendered as they are in nature: opposed to negative. See NEGATIVE, PHOTOGRAPHY.—Positive degree, in gram. is the form of an adjective which denotes simple or absolute quality, without comparison or relation to increase or diminution; as, wise, noble.—Positive electricity. See ELECTRICITY.—Positive evidence, in law, proof of the very fact.—Positive philosophy, a philosophical system founded by Auguste Comte (1798-1857). Its leading feature is what is known under the law of the three stages, which may be thus stated: every branch of knowledge passes through three stages, viz. the theological, the metaphysical, and the positive. In the first stage, the phenomena of nature are attempted to be explained by reference to supernatural causes, by voluntary interferences, by prodigies, miracles, and the like. In the second stage supernatural and anthropomorphic causes give place to abstract, occult causes, scholastic entities, realized abstractions, and nature is interpreted a priori: the attempt is made to construe nature subjectively. In the third stage, man contents himself with ascertaining by observation and experiment the connections of phenomena, and so learning to connect each fact with its antecedent conditions. This is the method which has founded modern science, and which must take the place of metaphysics. Whatever is not capable of experimental verification must be rigorously excluded from science. The second conception of this system is the classification and co-ordination of the sciences. The theory of this classification requires us to advance from the simple to the complex, beginning with mathematics, and passing in turn to astronomy, physics, chemistry, biology, and sociology: these are the six fundamental sciences, each of which is necessary to the next following one. Thus sociology or the science of society is impossible without biology, the science of life, and the latter is impossible without the science of chemistry; chemistry, again, presupposes physics, which itself presupposes astronomy and mathematics.—Positive pole of a voltaic pile or battery. See POLE.—Positive terms, in logic, those terms which denote a certain view of an object, as being actually taken of it.—Positive quantity, in alg. an affirmative or additive quantity, which character is indicated by the sign + (plus) prefixed to the quantity, called in consequence the positive sign. The term is used in contradistinction to negative.

Positive (poz'i-tiv), n. 1. That which is capable of being affirmed; reality. 'Rating positives by their privatives.' South.—2. That which settles by absolute appointment.

Positives, while under precept, cannot be slighted without slighting morals also.

Waterland.

3. In gram. the positive degree.—4. In photog. a picture in which the lights and shades are rendered as they are in nature: opposed to negative. Positives are obtained by printing from negatives. See NEGATIVE, PHOTOGRAPHY.

Positively (poz'i-tiv-ly), adv. In a positive manner: (a) absolutely; by itself; independent of anything else; not comparatively.

Good and evil removed may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply.

Bacon.

(b) Not negatively; really; in its own nature; directly; inherently; as, a thing is positively good, when it produces happiness by its own qualities or operation; it is negatively good, when it prevents an evil or does not produce it. (c) Certainly; indubitably.

Give me some breath, some little pause,
Before I positively speak in this.

Shak.

(d) Directly; explicitly; expressly; as, the witness testified positively to the fact. (e) Peremptorily; in strong terms.

The divine law positively requires humility and meekness.

Ep. Sprat.

(f) With full confidence or assurance; as, I cannot speak positively in regard to the fact.

(g) By positive electricity; as, positively electrified. See ELECTRICITY.

Positiveness (poz'i-tiv-nes), n. The state of being positive: (a) actualness; reality of existence; not mere negation.

The positiveness of sins of commission lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; the positiveness of sins of omission is in the habitude of the will only.

Norris.

(b) Undoubting assurance; full confidence; peremptoriness.

This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magistrativeness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating to matters of fact.

Dr. H. More.

Positivism (poz'i-tiv-izm), n. The positive philosophy (which see under POSITIVE).

This second period in modern philosophy has been marked by the sceptical phenomenalism of Hume (now represented by Positivism); the Scotch psychology of common sense; and the German critical and dialectical philosophy of reason.

Prof. Fraser.

Positivist (poz'i-tiv-ist), n. One who maintains the doctrines of positive philosophy.

Positivity (poz'i-tiv-i-ti), n. Peremptoriness. Watts. [Rare.]

Posture (poz'i-tür), n. Posture. 'The posture of the party's hand who did throw the dice.' Bramhall.

Posnet (poz'net), n. [W. posned, a round body, a porringer, from pos, increase, increment, a heap.] A little basin; a porringer, skillet, or saucpan. 'Chafing-dishes, posnets, and such other silver vessels.' Bacon.

Posology (po-sol'o-ji), n. [Gr. posos, how much, and logos, discourse.] The doctrine of proportions: (a) a name suggested by Bentham for the science of quantity. (b) That department of medicine which treats of the doses or quantities in which medicines ought to be administered.

Poss, Possé (pos), v. t. [Fr. posséder, to push, to thrust.] To push; to punch; to dash. 'The see . . . posseth him up and down.' Chaucer. [Obsolete and local.]

Posse (pos'se), [L., to be able.] 1. A possibility. A thing is said to be in posse, when it may possibly be; in esse, when it actually is.—2. A number or crowd of people.—Posse comitatus, lit. the power of a county; in law, the body of men which the sheriff is empowered to raise in case of riot, possession kept on forcible entry, rescue, or any attempt made in opposition to the execution of justice. It is said to include all knights and other men above the age of fifteen, able to travel within the county. The word comitatus is often omitted, and posse alone is used in the same sense.

Possess (poz-ze'), v. t. [L. possideo, possession, to occupy, to possess—pos for por (see POLLUTE), and sedeo, to sit. Comp. G. besitzen, A. Sax. besittan, to possess, from be, by, and sittan, to sit.] 1. To occupy in person; to have as occupant; to have and hold.

Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land.

Jer. xxxii. 15.

O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possessed it.

Shak.

2. To have as a piece of property or as a personal belonging; to be owner of; to own; to enjoy; as, to possess much money and property; to possess many good qualities. 'Share all that he doth possess.' Shak. 'The present benefit which I possess.' Shak.—3. To become or make one's self master of; to seize; to gain; to obtain the occupation of.

The English marched toward the river Eske, intending to possess a hill called Under-Eske.

Hayward.

4. To affect strongly; to pervade; to fill or take up entirely. 'Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye.' Shak. 'What a strange drowsiness possesses them.' Shak.

As the love of Christ and the love of God possesseth and seizeth upon a soul, so self-love decays.

Dr. Sibbes.

5. To have full power or mastery over; as, an evil spirit, evil influence, violent passion, or the like. Luke viii. 38. 'An she were not possessed with a fury.' Shak. 'Possessed with devilish spirits.' Shak.

Beware what spirit rages in your breast;
For ten inspired, ten thousand are possessed.

Roscommon.

6. To put in possession; to make master or owner: with of before the thing, and now generally used in the passive or with reflexive pronouns; as, to be possessed of a large fortune; to possess one's self of another's property. 'Will possess you of that ship and treasure.' Shak. 'Had possessed himself of the kingdom.' Shak. 'The moveables whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possessed.' Shak. 'Of fortune's favour long possessed.' Dryden.

We possessed ourselves of the kingdom of Naples.

Addison.

7. † To make acquainted with; to acquaint; to inform. 'Possess the people in Messina here how innocent she died.' Shak.

Let not your ears despise my tongue,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Shak.

Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Shak.

8. To furnish or fill; to imbue or instil into; with with before the thing.

It is of unspeakable advantage to possess our minds with an habitual good intention.

Addison.

Hence . . . it is laid down by Holt, that to possess the people with an ill opinion of the government, that is, of the ministry, is a libel.

Hallam.

9. † To accomplish. 'To possess the purpose they desired.' Spenser.

Possession (poz-zesh'on), n. 1. The having, holding, or detention of property in one's power or command; the state of owning or having in one's hands or power; actual seizing or occupancy, either rightful or wrongful. One man may have the possession of a thing, and another may have the right of possession or property.

If the possession is severed from the property; if A has the right of property, and B by unlawful means has gained possession, this is an injury to A. This is a bare or naked possession. Blackstone.

In Eng. law, a personal chattel is held by possession, a real estate by title. Natural possession is where the proprietor himself is actually in possession. Civil possession is possession not by the owner, but by another in his name or for his behoof. Actual possession is where a person enters into lands or tenements descended or conveyed to him. Possession in law is when lands, &c., are descended to a man, and he has not actually entered into them. Naked possession is mere possession without colour of right.—2. The thing possessed; land, estate, or goods owned; as, foreign possessions.

The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions.

Obad. 17. When the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions.

Mat. xix. 22. 3. In international law, a country or territory held by no other title than mere conquest. Bouvier.—4. The state of being under the power of demons, evil spirits, or violent passions; madness; lunacy; as, demoniacal possession.

I knew he was not in his perfect wits . . . How long hath this possession held the man? Shak.

—Writ of possession, in law, a precept directing a sheriff to put a person in peaceable possession of property recovered in ejectment.—To take possession, to enter on or to bring within one's power or occupancy.—To give possession, to put in another's power or occupancy.

Possession† (poz-zesh'on), v.t. To invest with property.

Possibility (pos-i-bil'i-ti), n. 1. The state or condition of being possible; the power of being or existing; the power of happening. It often implies improbability or great uncertainty; as, there is a possibility that a new star may appear this night. 'Possibility of error.' Hooker.

A bare possibility that a thing may be or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not.

It is pleasant to see great works in their seminal state, pregnant with latent possibilities of excellence. Johnson.

2. A thing possible; that which may take place or come into being.

Consider him antecedently to his creation, while yet he lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection. South.

3. In law, a chance or expectation; an uncertain thing which may or may not happen. It is near or ordinary, as where an estate is limited to one after the death of another; or remote or extraordinary, as where it is limited to a man provided he shall be married to a certain woman, and then that she shall die, and he be married to another. Wharton.

Possible (pos'i-bl), a. [From L. possibilis, from posse, to be able, to have power, from potis, able, and esse, to be. Power is also from potis.] 1. That may be or exist; that may be now, or may happen or come to pass; that may be done; not contrary to the nature of things; as, it is possible the peace of Europe may continue a century; it is not possible that two and three should be seven, or that the same action should be morally right and morally wrong.—2. Capable of coming to pass, but improbable.

He must not stay within doors, for fear the house should fall upon him, for that is possible; nor must he go out, lest the next man that meets him should kill him, for that is also possible. Watkins.

Possibly (pos'i-bli), adv. 1. In a possible manner; by any power, moral or physical, really existing; by possibility.

Can we want obedience then To him, or possibly his love desert Who form'd us from the dust? Milton.

2. Perhaps; perchance.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with authority circumscribed by laws. Addison.

Possum (pos'um), n. A colloquial contraction in the United States of Opossum.—To play possum, to act possum, to feign; to dissemble; in allusion to the habit of the opossum, which throws itself on its back and feigns death on the approach of an enemy.

Post-office (pōst'of'is), n. 1. An office or house where letters are received for transmission to various parts, and from which letters are delivered that have been received from places at home and abroad.—2. A department of the government charged with the conveyance of letters, &c., by post.—Post-office annuity and insurance, a system whereby the postmaster-general may insure lives between the ages of sixteen and sixty for not less than £20 or more than £100, and may also grant annuities of not more than £50.—General post-office, the principal post-office in London; also applied to the head-office in any large city or town.—Post-office order. See MONEY-ORDER.—Post-office savings-bank, a bank connected with the post-office, where deposits are received to a certain amount, on government security, at a rate of interest of 2½ per cent per annum.

Post-oral (pōst'ō-ral), a. Situated behind the mouth.

Post-paid (pōst-pād'), a. Having the postage prepaid; as, a post-paid letter.

Post-pleiocene, Post-pliocene (pōst-pli'ō-sēn), n. and a. In geol. the common term for all the deposits of later age than the Norwich crag, and older than the peat-mosses and river gravels which contain neolithic remains. These deposits are the glacial drifts and boulder-clays with the erratics and other signs of ice agency, the valley gravels and cave earths with paleolithic remains. Called also Pleistocene.

Postpone (pōst-pōn'), v.t. pret. & pp. postponed; ppr. postponing. [L. postpono—post, after, and pono, to put.] 1. To put off; to defer to a future or later time; to delay; as, to postpone the consideration of a bill or question to the afternoon or to the following day.

These words, by postponing of the parenthesis to its proper place, are more clearly understood.

*Knatchbull.
Rogers.*

2. To set below something else in value or importance.

All other considerations should give way and be postponed to this. Locke.

SYN. To adjourn, defer, delay, procrastinate.

Postponement (pōst-pōn'ment), n. The act of postponing or deferring to a future time; temporary delay of business.

Postponence† (pōst-pōn'ens), n. Disesteem; disregard. Johnson.

Postponer (pōst-pōn'ēr), n. One who postpones; one who delays or puts off.

Postpose (pōst-pōz'), v.t. 1. To place after. 2. To postpone; to put off. Fuller.

Postposit† (pōst-pōz'it), v.t. To postpone; to regard as of inferior value. Feltham.

Post-position (pōst-pō-zish'on), n. 1. The act of placing after; the state of being put behind.

Nor is the post-position of the nominative case to the verb against the use of the tongue. Joseph Mede.

2. In gram. a word or particle placed after or at the end of a word.

In almost all the native languages of Asia, what we call prepositions follow their noun; often, like the article and reflexive pronoun, coalescing with it, so as to form, or simulate, an inflection. The inconvenience of such a term as preposition is now manifest; nor is it much remedied when we allow ourselves to use the contradictory phrase post-positive preposition. What is really wanted is a general name for that part of speech under which preposition and post-position may stand as co-ordinate terms. Latham.

Post-positional (pōst-pō-zish'on-al), a. Pertaining to a post-position.

Post-positive (pōst-pōz'it-iv), a. Placed after something else, as a word.

Post-prandial (pōst-pran-di-al), a. [L. post, after, and prandium, a dinner.] Happening after dinner. 'Post-prandial speeches.' Palmerston.

Post-remote (pōst-rē-mōt), a. More remote in subsequent time or order. Darwin.

Postscenium (pōst-sē-ni-um), n. [L. from post, behind, and scena, a scene.] In arch. the back part of a theatre behind the scenes.

Postscript (pōst'skript), n. [L. post, after, and scriptum, written.] A paragraph added to a letter after it is concluded and signed by the writer, or any addition made to a book or composition after it had been supposed to be finished, containing something omitted, or something new occurring to the writer; something appended. 'A postscript dashed across the rest.' Tennyson.

I knew one, that when he wrote a letter, he would put that which was most material in the postscript. Locke.

Postscript (pōst'skript-ed), a. Having a postscript; written afterwards. J. Quincy Adams. [Rare.]

Post-terminum (pōst-ter'mi-num), [L.] In law, after the term.

Post-tertiary (pōst-ter'shi-a-ri), a. In geol. the Tertiary term for all deposits and phenomena of more recent date than the Norwich or mammaliferous crag. It may be restricted so as only to include accumulations and deposits formed since the close of the glacial or boulder drift systems, and has been divided into three sections—historic, pre-historic, and post-glacial. The first comprises the peat of Great Britain and Ireland, fens, marshes, river-deposits, lake-silts, accumulations of sand-drift, &c., containing human remains, canoes, metal instruments, remains of domestic animals, &c. The pre-historic comprises similar, or nearly similar deposits, but the remains found in them are older, comprising stone implements, pile-dwellings, and extinct animals, as the Irish deer, mammoth, &c. To the post-glacial belong raised beaches, with shells of a more boreal character than those of existing seas, the shell-marl under peat, most of our carse, dales, as well as the common brick-clay, &c., covering submarine forests or containing the remains of seals, whales, &c., as well as of extinct land animals, as the mammoth, rhinoceros, urus, hyæna, hippopotamus, &c.

Postulant (pōst'tū-lant), n. One who demands or requests; a candidate. Chesterfield.

Postulate (pōst'tū-lāt), n. [L. postulatum, a demand, from postulo, to ask, to demand, from posco, to ask for urgently, to demand.]

1. A position or supposition assumed without proof, or one which is considered as self-evident, or too plain to require illustration; a proposition of which the truth is demanded or assumed for the purpose of future reasoning; a necessary assumption.—2. In geom. something of the nature of a problem assumed or taken for granted; the enunciation of a self-evident problem.

Euclid has constructed his elements on the three following postulates: 1. Let it be granted that a straight line may be drawn from any one point to any other point.

2. That a terminated straight line may be produced to any length in a straight line.

3. That a circle may be described from any centre at any distance from that centre.—Axiom, Postulate. See AXIOM.

Postulate (pōst'tū-lāt), v.t. pret. & pp. postulated; ppr. postulating. [See above.] 1. To beg or assume without proof; to regard as self-evident, or as too obvious to require further proof or explanation.
